State GOP Leaders Pick Taft as '52 Party Choice

Nation-Wide Survey Gives Him Big Lead, With Eisenhower, Duff, Warren Liked

Copyright, 1950, by United Press

A Nation-wide poll of State Republican chairmen yesterday showed Ohio's Senator Robert A. Taft an overwhelming choice for the GOP presidential nomination in 1952.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower rated a long-shot second in the United Press survey. Republican leaders still aren't sure they can get him.

Trailing far behind those two came California's Gov. Earl Warren, Senator-elect James H. Duff of Pennsylvania, and Minnesota's Harold E. Stassen.

Fifteen of the 40 GOP State leaders who replied stated they were definitely for Taft while a majority of others included the Ohio Senator in their lists of preference.

Dewey Practically Ignored

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, the twice-beaten presidential contender, was practically ignored by the party chieftains who will control the convention votes.

Cocky and elated over their sweeping gains in Tuesday's election, the Republican chairmen interpreted the returns as the beginning of the end of the Democratic Party's 17-year reign. They asserted almost unanimously that any one of their five top choices could knock President Truman out of the White House if the election were held right now.

While many of the 40 GOP State leaders who replied to the questionnaire pointed out that the nominating conventions still are almost two years away, they were obviously impressed by Taft's new-found power at the polls.

Won By 430,000 Votes

The 61-year-old Ohioan failed three times before to get the nomination because his party thought he lacked political sex appeal. But he confounded the experts on Election Day and heartened some fellow-Republicans who had been afraid to buck organized labor.

Tagged by the Democrats and labor's political bosses as the man to beat, Taft took them all on together and won by 430,000 votes—the biggest plurality of his career.

Taft said Friday he is not a candidate for the presidency right now but indicated he could be had.

"I don't say that I wouldn't take the nomination if it were offered to me," he said, "but I shall make no campaign to get it."

Pennsylvanian Wary

M. Harvey Taylor, chairman of the Duff-controlled Pennsylvania delegation which will play a key role in the 1952 convention, refused to show his hand. "It's too far ahead," he said. "My eyes aren't that good."

Nevada Republican Chairman Harold Stocker professed a Western preference for Warren, but admitted that Taft looked stronger at the polls.

"Warren had an easy time of World Conditions Cancel Dinner Of Gridiron Club

The Gridiron Club, famous organization of Washington newspapermen, announced yesterday it had canceled its usual winter dinner because of unsettled world conditions.

The dinners, usually attended by the President, Cabinet officers and other nationally known figures, satirize public officials and policies.

The winter dinner normally takes place in early December.

66c Post Ad Sells Coat for $175

A housewife in Northwest Washington had a black Persian lamb coat she wanted to dispose of.

She placed a two-line classified ad in The Washington Post at a cost of 66c. As a result of the ad, she sold the coat to the first caller, for $175.

If you have anything at all to sell, there's no easier way to do it than with a Post classified ad. It's low in cost—high in results, and as convenient as your telephone.

All you have to do is dial NAtional 4200 and ask for Classified.

Fit and Ready for Fight

Vandenberg to Be Back on Job In January, Spokesman Says

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg passed the word yesterday that he will be on deck when the Eighty-second Congress convenes in January, fit and ready to fight for the bipartisan foreign policy he helped create.

A spokesman for the 66-year-old Senator said there is no likelihood Vandenberg will resign because of failing health.

The spokesman said Vandenberg is recovering on schedule from the series of operations he has undergone in the past year and will be physically fit to resume his GOP leadership in the red-hot foreign policy debates shaping up for the new Congress.

The statement was prompted by reports from some of Vandenberg's associates that they expected a decision from him shortly on whether his health would permit him to return to the Senate.

"Mr. Vandenberg definitely will be back in January," the spokesman said. "He is getting the rest prescribed for him and is recovering exactly on schedule. At no time has he faced a decision on resigning or not, and his doctors say he will be fully capable of resuming leadership in the Senate next year.

"His paramount objective in life is to return and fill in the breach of the bipartisan foreign policy caused by his recent illness."

Showdown Shaping

Truman, Taft Now Regarded As Top Political Contenders

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

The big void in Tuesday's election picture concerns the yacht Williamsburg, and what happened in her spacious lounge as the returns came in over the radio teletype.

How did President Truman react to the Republican gains? And what did he say to his fellow yachtsmen, Steelman, Connelly, Ross, Hassett, Vaughan and Landry?

Above all, politicians would like to know this: How did he feel about the triumph of his old foe, Senator Robert A. Taft, in Ohio? Did it arouse the warrior spirit in him?

Between now and convention time in 1952, which is roughly a year and seven months, the possibility of a Truman-Taft battle for the Presidency will be very much in the public mind. To a lot of people — Democrats and Republicans—it would seem like a natural.

It would bring into the national arena two men who are miles apart politically (although seemingly good friends when they bump into each other at banquets); two men who dominate their respective parties, and who in the public mind symbolize those parties.

Two "ifs" stand in the way of such a dramatic showdown, as follows:

Will Mr. Truman agree to run?

Will the GOP allow Taft to run?

(The Ohio Senator has said he won't make a campaign for the nomination, but has indicated he would respond to a "draft." In the language of politics, that means "yes.")

There is a widespread opinion that the President already has made up his mind to make the race in '52. His intimates say, however, that this is not the case. They say that they don't know what Mr. Truman is going to do, and they add that they doubt if he does either.

At least, that's what they were saying before last Tuesday.

There is a suspicion, well-grounded, that Mr. Truman would find it awfully hard to hold back if Taft seemed likely to be the next Republican nominee.

In 1948, in advance of the GOP convention at Philadelphia, Taft was known as the White House candidate. He was the man Mr. Truman's associates hoped would get the prize that finally went to Governor Dewey. They felt that the Ohioan would be the easiest to beat.

Later on, after the November election, they weren't so sure about that earlier view of Taft. Mr. Truman, himself, said that Dewey had been his greatest asset, the big factor in his upset victory.

Today Senator Taft has far

Kelly Leading Gov. Williams By 307 Votes

Close Michigan Race May Hinge on Count In Single Township

DETROIT, Nov. 11 (AP).—The Michigan governorship race, still a virtual standoff after four post-election days of ballot-bungling, appeared tonight to be reaching the nub of the real margin between Gov. G. Mennen Williams and former Gov. Harry F. Kelly.

With an ocean of errors wrung out of unofficial election returns in most counties, Republican Kelly had a "paper" lead of 307 votes over Democrat Williams, the 39-year-old first-termer.

The lead was a "paper" lead, in the opinion of election observers, because it rested on an error in one township of Macomb County that was almost a certainty to produce several hundred more Democratic ballots in a recount.

An election official said the tally sheet for the normally Democratic township failed to show for whom 928 straight-ticket ballots were voted. The official implied that a majority of these would be for Williams. But he said that could be determined only by a recount. The canvassers may not reopen ballot boxes.

And a recount appeared a certainty.

Seventy-four of Michigan's 83 counties have reported semi-officially or officially the results of their governorship race canvass.

Four of the remainder had reported partly canvassed figures and only five—though all populous ones—had no official figures yet in the tally columns.

Thus the outcome lies now in a scant nine counties or in a recount.

Meanwhile, the Wayne County Board of Canvassers ordered an inquiry into the jumbled Detroit election bookkeeping.

Miss Marguerite A. Montgomery, chairman of the Wayne commission, asked Louis A. Urban, city elections director, to appear and to obtain subpenas from the City Election Commission for members of 32 precinct election boards which produced the first big error.

'Scandalous Conduct' Assailed

Catholics in Milwaukee Ban 'Beboppers' in Church Schools

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—The Catholic Church, in a move to combat juvenile delinquency, today banned "beboppers" and "bebop gangs" from the 49 Catholic schools of the Milwaukee Archdiocese.

The Right Rev. Edmund J. Goebel, superintendent of Catholic schools, sent the order to principals of 25 high schools and 24 grade schools with a total enrollment of about 10,000.

The order, issued with the approval of the Most Rev. Moses E. Kiley, Archbishop of Milwaukee, said:

"Beboppers can be detected by their dress, freakish haircuts, gang threats and abuse, unorthodox conduct and other marks of behavior. We cannot tolerate scandalous conduct."

The order said pupils who wear "bebop" clothes or indulge in "bebop" behavior will be expelled and barred from enrolling in other Catholic schools.

Lieut. Michael Wolke of the Police Department's Youth Aid Bureau said bebop gangs are formed from teen-agers who make a cult of bebop music.

Some bebop groups are harmless, he said, while others indulge in drinking, marijuana smoking,

Sub-Freezing Predicted in District Area

22 in Suburbs, 28 In City; Snow Falls Nearly an Hour But Fails to Stick

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

Temperatures were due to drop to 28 degrees in Washington and 22 in the suburbs early today.

Winter, the Weather Bureau announced, has arrived—at least a good foretaste.

But not only in Washington. The same cold air mass that brought the District early yesterday its first snow of the season—just a lick-and-promise-worth of flurries—has chilled most of the Nation.

In Washington it held the high yesterday to 45 degrees—Friday's was 66. The low yesterday morning was 36 compared to Friday's 48.

High of 44 Today

The afternoon high today, forecasters said, should hit 44 or 50. Then temperatures will again fall below freezing late tonight and early Monday.

The return to normal mid-November weather, with a temperature ranging from 38 to 56 degrees, will come slowly and gradually.

But at least there's no rain in sight for the next two or three days. The forecast for today calls for fair skies.

The snowfall early yesterday lasted less than an hour. At the Weather Bureau's airport offices the fall was recorded from 6:55 to 7:35 a. m.

Few accidents in the District were reported in the early morning, despite slippery streets.

Meanwhile, Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, District Engineer Commissioner, said Washington's snow-parking ban will not be imposed this year.

Young, Mason Oppose Ban

The ban affected 80 miles of District streets, and was imposed to keep roads free of cars so snowplows could clear the thoroughfares in the early morning hours. Last year a combination of warm weather and anti-ban public opinion resulted in District Commissioners' decision to rescind the 15-year-old regulation.

Engineer Commissioner Young said Commissioners Guy Mason and John Russell Young oppose the ban. But General Young said his traffic and sanitation departments still favor it.

"You don't drop the fire insurance on your house just because you haven't had a fire this year," General Young said.

He added that he did not feel strongly enough in favor of the ban to attempt to push it through.

For the Nation as a whole today, there is little snow in prospect—cold, yes.

At least four deaths were attributed to the weather. One community, the Colorado hamlet of Allenspark, was falsely reported snowbound. A military rescue team arrived to aid the town, only to find everybody snug and well fed.

Colorado had the record cold spot yesterday—a nipping 4 degrees below in the town of Big Piney. Jamestown, N. Dak., reported a 7-below.

Although much of the West was cold, Los Angelinos went coatless in 80-degree temperatures.

Even in Florida yesterday—at least as far down as the central part of the State—it was colder than that.

Publication Schedule Unbroken

The Washington Post Starts Move to New L Street 'Home'

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The Washington Post at 2 a. m. today began the fifth move of its 73 years into the most modern newspaper plant in the world—at 1515 L st. nw.

Monday morning's paper will be the last one written and edited from the old "gashouse Gothic" Post building at 1337 E st. nw. The Post was published there for 57 years.

The weekend move does not include the executive offices or the advertising, business and circulation departments.

These departments, and the front counter—where the public places ads, purchases back issues and takes out subscriptions—will remain at the E street building for some weeks until their new quarters are finished.

The job of moving into a new home and putting out a newspaper simultaneously will cover more than 30 hours, ending about 9 a. m. Monday.

What is involved when a daily newspaper moves up the street?

During the moving period, two local transfer firms — Fidelity Storage and Merchants Transfer & Storage companies—will haul about 781,000 pounds of equipment, all of which must be operating within minutes after being set in place.

In manpower, the task of just planning moving day for the various departments of the paper has involved some 3000 supervisory hours over the last six weeks.

When a housewife moves into a new house, she and her husband can call it quits after the beds are set up. She then may settle one room at a time if she likes.

Not so with a newspaper, unless it decides not to print on moving day (and it just isn't done in the business). Every piece of equipment must be in place and ready to go.

For this reason, a precise moving timetable has been worked out.

Shortly after today's paper is "put to bed," movers are scheduled to barge into the old Post composing room and start hauling out the linotype machines.

Moving these typesetting machines, each weighing about 4000 pounds, is the major undertaking.

Too heavy and too large to go down the elevators in the old building, the movers plan to erect

Armistice Rites Honor Korean Dead

4655 GI Victims Won't Be Forgotten, Marshall Says in Arlington Ceremony

Americans yesterday paid tribute to the Nation's war dead in solemn Armistice Day ceremonies darkened by the threat of a third World War.

Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall, speaking at Arlington Cemetery on the thirty-second anniversary of the first Armistice, pledged that the more than 4655 Americans who have fallen in Korea will not be forgotten.

From the memorial amphitheater overlooking long lines of white crosses, Erle Cocke, jr., national commander of the American Legion, called for "total mobilization of this Nation's armed forces."

Some 2000 persons listened under cold, gray skies while Cocke asked for mobilization in the belief that nothing less will "discourage Communist leaders from touching off total war." The Chinese Reds are fighting in Korea today with the approval of Russia, he declared, and "in accordance with the Stalin blueprint for world conquest."

President Sends Aide

President Truman, absent from Washington on a Potomac River cruise, was represented by Col. Cornelius J. Mara, his assistant military aide. Col. Mara added the Presidential wreath at the base of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, banked high with similar offerings.

General Marshall, standing at the graveside of his World War I chief, Gen. John J. Pershing, was the only high government official to speak at Arlington. The Secretary of Defense was joined by Legion officials in laying a wreath at the tomb of Pershing.

Marshall, who succeeded Pershing as chairman of the Battle Monuments Commission, said that chapels are being erected in each of the 22 military cemeteries abroad. Permanent records of the men buried there will be kept in the shrines.

Will Remind Other Peoples

"The memorials will remind the peoples of Europe, Africa and the Far East that American men fought, bled and died side by side with their own sons to make life more abundant for all of us," he said.

Ceremonies at the cemetery began at 8:30 a.m. with the laying of a wreath at the tomb by representatives of the Blue Star Mothers of America, who added prayers in behalf of mothers whose sons have died in Korea.

A 17-gun salute was fired by Fort Myer batteries at 8:45 a.m. when Col. B. C. Limb, Foreign Minister of Korea, arrived to

Capital Division Set Back 5 Miles; Reds in Action on Whole Battlefront

TOKYO (Sunday), Nov. 12. (U.P.).—Communist forces counterattacked in the center and on both flanks of the 250-mile battlefront Saturday night after United Nations troops took the offensive and advanced 4 miles toward the Manchurian border.

Communist units reported to include both Chinese and North Koreans drove South Korean forces out of ruined Tokchon in the north central sector and pinned down an American battalion with heavy mortar fire.

On the northeast coast six enemy battalions threw the South Korean Capitol Division back 5 miles

SEOUL (Sunday), Nov. 12 (AP).—Allied troops attacked northward from their Chongchon River bridgehead in northwest Korea Saturday, gaining 4 miles in the first three hours.

Red opposition ranged from slight to heavy.

The advance broke a five-day lull in ground operations.

In the period of quiet, Chinese and North Korean Communist troops had pulled back to far North Korea after delivering hard shock punches to the Allies.

The United States Twenty-Fourth Division and the British Commonwealth Brigade struck four miles northward on the west end of the 100-mile Allied line across the waist of North Korea. They met almost no opposition. In three hours Twenty-Fourth Division patrols had reached the approaches to Pakchon. That is eight miles north of Anju, site of a vital bridge across the Chongchon River.

The United States First Cavalry Division, to the east, ran into what a spokesman called "very, very heavy resistance" from firmly dug-in Reds only 500 yards north of the river.

Maj. Gen. John H. Church, Twenty-fourth Division commander, said he believed that Chinese were in strong defensive positions about 5 miles north of the most advanced Twenty-fourth position around Pakchon.

Church said he did not believe there was any need to occupy Pakchon, as the town had been "virtually leveled" by repeated air bombardment. Most Red troops there withdrew several days ago, he said.

The general said his study of Chinese Communist troops in Korea indicates "they are fighting without any animosity."

"They just obey commands and try to do what they are ordered."

He said he had no reports that Chinese Reds had mistreated American prisoners. In fact, he added, he heard they gave captured Americans water, food and as much medical care as they could.

Church said the Chinese troops fight stubbornly, even under heavy artillery fire. They man their main defense positions themselves, he said, and use North Koreans only for flank protection.

On the left flank of the Twenty-fourth Division, South Korean First Corps troops crossed the Taeryong River and cut the Kasan-Pakchon road. A spokesman said they were fighting Reds in battalion strength.

In the center of the Allied line, U. S. Marines just south of the Changjin reservoir got set for expected assaults from Reds reported moving toward them from the north.

The Marines' main force was on a plateau nine and one-half

Yule Leave Set by Army For Trainees

By the United Press

The Army announced yesterday that troop training in the United States would be suspended from December 23 through January 1 to enable most soldiers to spend Christmas at home.

The Air Force, meantime, is considering a similar Christmas leave program for trainees now stationed at domestic bases.

The Navy and Marine Corps are expected to follow their usual policy of permitting various commands to work out holiday leave schedules.

"In meeting the rigorous standards of the current training program," the Army said, "the trainees have demonstrated a degree of progress which makes possible this short suspension of scheduled training."

Army spokesmen said training will be stepped up after the first of the year.

Bullet Hits Near Cates, Wife in Home

Marine Commandant Laughs at Idea Of Assassination

A stray bullet smashed through a window in the residence of the Commandant of the Marine Corps yesterday, narrowly missing Gen. Clifton B. Cates and his wife.

The .22 caliber bullet passed a few feet from General and Mrs. Cates as they were reading before lunch, drove through a fire screen and imbedded itself inside the fireplace.

From the bullet's trajectory, General Gates estimated it was fired perhaps as much as one mile southeast of the building, at 8th and I sts. se.

The bullet left a 20-foot path of glass splinters across the second-floor library. The hole in the fire screen was three feet lower than the hole in the curved plate glass window.

General Gates laughed at any idea of an assassination attempt, and refused to report the incident to police.

"First thing we heard was this noise. This is an old house—the only one the British left standing in 1812—and we hear a lot of funny noises, but this was a new one," the general said.

"Then I saw the hole in the window and started looking for a bullet. We saw some glass over by the fire screen and then found the bullet hole in that. I didn't even bother to look for the bullet in the fireplace. Too many ashes."

The Marine officer of the day reported that no firearms had been fired in the barracks during the morning. The general said there were few if any .22-caliber pieces on the post.

Navy Fills Quota For 'Priority One'

The Navy yesterday stopped accepting applications for commissions from doctors and dentists classified as "priority one" in the doctors draft.

"Priority one" includes medical men who were educated at Government expense during World War II, or who were deferred from military service to continue their educations, and who served less than 90 days in the armed forces afterward.

The Navy said that more than enough applications are on hand to fill "priority one" quotas allotted to it by the Defense Department.

Peiping Proposes To Discuss Claim Of 'Intervention' By Americans

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 11 (AP).—Communist China notified the United Nations today she is sending a nine-man delegation here to argue her charges the United States is an aggressor, but rejects a Security Council invitation to discuss Chinese intervention in Korea.

The Communist Chinese Foreign Minister, Chou En-lai, announced the decisions in two separate cables to the U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie.

The situation, in brief, is this:

1. The Peiping regime notified Lie a delegation will depart by air from Peiping November 14 in response to a Security Council invitation extended September 29 for the Communists to be represented in Council talks on the Peiping charge that sealing off of Nationalist-held Formosa by the United States Seventh Fleet constitutes aggression against China.

2. The Chinese Communists, in another communication later to Lie, said they rejected a Security Council invitation issued November 8 for Peiping to send a delegation here to talk about American charges the Chinese Communists have intervened in the North Korean fighting.

No Date Set for Meeting

3. The Chinese Communists proposed, in turn, that the Security Council consider together their charges concerning Formosa and of other American aggression in Korea and air attacks on Manchuria.

The early view of delegates and officials here, on the basis of the communications received from Chou, was that the Korean situation undoubtedly would be discussed.

Warren R. Austin, United States Delegate, told the Council last Wednesday in voting for the invitation to the Chinese Reds that he had a number of questions to ask their representatives if and when they came.

Since the Chinese Communists want to talk about alleged American aggression in Korea, Austin is expected here to have an opportunity to ask his questions.

The Council has before it a resolution proposed by six countries—the United States, France, Britain, Cuba, Ecuador and Norway — calling for withdrawal of Communist Chinese forces from Korea and promising that Communist China's boundaries will be respected.

This resolution is expected to be discussed when the Korean question comes up and the Chinese Communists are at the table. There was no indication when the Council would meet on Korea again.

Chou's first telegram to Lie was merely a short notice his delega-

Prince of Thebes Tomb Uncovered, 2600 Years Old

LUXOR, Egypt, Nov. 11 (AP).—Egyptian archaeologists disclosed today they have found the 2600-year-old tomb of ancient Egyptian high priest Mentemhet, also known as the Prince of Thebes. It was uncovered three years ago, but kept secret.

They said the find, including statues, offering tables, sarcophagi and bas reliefs in the rare Saitic (for Sais, an ancient capital of Egypt) style, undoubtedly will be enriched further by continued excavations, scheduled for another two years. They hope to find other Seventh Century B.C. tombs, since the Mentemhet tomb indicates the people of that time buried their dead carefully.

Mentemhet was the governor of Upper (Southern) Egypt and Thebes in the Seventh Century B.C. under the Pharaoh Taharqa, of the twenty-fifth dynasty. He is known to have witnessed the Assyrian invasion of Egypt in 671 B.C.

Phone Strikers Stop Picketing To Let Girls Earn Holiday Pay

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Long-distance service was generally reported back to normal by the Bell Telephone System yesterday, as striking Western Electric employes eased up on their picketing activities on the third day of the walkout.

A Bell System official said in New York yesterday that 75 percent of the regular long-lines operators were on the jobs, and that the duties of those who refused to cross the strikers' picket lines were being performed by supervisory help.

In the District and in Virginia, Missouri, and New Mexico, the Western Electric strikers—who've been throwing picket lines around plants and buildings of other Bell System subsidiaries—withheld the picket lines in order to permit Bell phone company employes to report to their jobs and get double pay for holiday work.

Locally, the picketing strategy ran into a snag early yesterday morning when six Western Electric strikers ignored the instructions of the strike leaders and set up a picket line before the main building of Chesapeake & Poto-

Red Jet Shot Down In Fierce Combat

FIFTH AIR FORCE HEADQUARTERS, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—A fierce air battle raged south of the Manchurian border today, when Soviet-built fighter planes made two unsuccessful attempts to crack through a blockade of American jet planes.

The Soviet MIG-15s scurried back to their bases in Manchuria after failing to pierce the wall of machine-gun bullets from United States Shooting Stars patrolling the border just south of the Yalu River boundary line in northwestern Korea.

First Lieut. Garland D. Hanson, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., scored the only confirmed "kill" of the day in the fighting over Sinuiju. He said he saw an MIG-15 crash in flames.

It was the fourth MIG-15 shot down by Allied planes this week. Two were destroyed by Fifth Air Force jets, one by a Navy Panther jet and one by a B-29 gunner.

The total unofficial score of American planes against enemy jets to date is four destroyed, two probably destroyed, 10 damaged and six probably damaged.

No American fighter plane has been lost in action with enemy jets. An F-51, flying in support of ground troops, and its pilot were lost, however, and a B-26 bomber was hit. The bomber crew baled out safely.

Allied aircraft flew in support of the Marines fighting toward the Chosin reservoir in northeast Korea. The key rail and highway area around Huichon, north of Kunuri, was under constant attack by F-80 jets and Mustangs, and the city was reported aflame at 5 p. m. Saturday.

In addition to flying combat patrols along the Yalu River, the Fifth Air Force went out in 128 close-support sorties and claimed at least 700 enemy troops killed in air strikes over the northwest front.

Behind the Scenes

Sforza Notes Italy, China, U. N. Roles

ROME, Nov. 11 (AP).—A proposal, never carried out, by which Italy and "an Oriental country"—apparently Communist China—would have been admitted simultaneously to the United Nations was disclosed by Foreign Minister Carlo Sforza in a speech to Parliament.

The Minister's disclosure was made during a defense of Italian government foreign policy while he was discussing Italy's nonrecognition of the Mao Tse-tung government.

Russia has consistently opposed Italy's entrance into the U. N., but Sforza did not refer to the Soviet Union by name in telling of the proposal.

His disclosure came when he replied to a Communist deputy's question as to why Italy had not recognized China's Communist government.

Sforza began his reply by stating that some months ago, taking into account "the importance of our commerce with China and the life of our Catholic missions," consideration was given at the opportune moment to the recognition of the Mao Tse-tung government "which today represents almost all of the territory of China."

"But," Sforza continued, "because of customs between truly friendly governments," he discussed the subject with the American government, and said "this was their reply:

"Italian interests in China are Italy's concern. If you believe it useful for your economic interests to give this recognition we have no objections to make."

Sforza then told the deputies that if China is going to embark on "military enterprises contrary to international law"—evidently a reference to Chinese troops in Korea and the Chinese invasion of Tibet—"it is clear that also for this reason" recognition of Mao Tse-tung will have to wait.

"I can add," the Foreign Minister continued, "that the Italian government is so free of prejudice and antipathy that when last September in the United States I was seeking Italy's entry into the United Nations—and you know from whence comes the objections to our entry—I was favorable when a most authoritative source asked me if I should favor the simultaneous entry—in order not to disturb the balance in the United Nations—of Italy and an Eastern country, I replied that for my part I found the proposal very natural. This proves our independence of judgment in all political and diplomatic problems."

Drive to Clear Church of Debt To Start Today

A $30,000 campaign to pay off the debts of the First Church of the Nazarene in Arlington will begin at 2:30 p. m. today at the church, N. 21st and Taft sts.

The church was bought last month by W. P. Ames, Arlington lumber dealer and his brother, Col. Norman B. Ames, dean of the school of electrical engineering at George Washington University. Their action forestalled foreclosure of the property due to delinquent mortgage payments.

The Ames brothers will be among speakers at the opening of the campaign. A committee of 20 Arlington residents has been set up to direct the drive for $30,000.

DAMAGED IN FLEET MANEUVERS—With the upper part of her bow overhanging a 20-foot portion of the ripped-out lower section, the collision-damaged United States destroyer Brownson docked at the naval operating base in Bermuda yesterday. The destroyer made port under her own power after a 200-mile trip. It was in collision with the destroyer Roan November 8 during fleet maneuvers off the North Carolina coast. Four men were killed and three injured in the accident tion would leave November 14. It will be headed by Wu Hsiu-chuan, who has been identified as chief of the Russian section of the Peiping Foreign Office.

The rejection of the Council invitation of November 8 was next. It was accompanied by a fanfare on the Peiping radio, telling the world an important statement was coming up.

Shortly after the text of the Peiping radio statement was received here, the U. N. officially received a copy of the Chinese Communist document.

Chou said the invitation, by limiting the discussion to the American charges of Communist intervention in Korea, deprived the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China of the right to discuss in the Council the two most pressing questions for the Chinese people: the charges of armed American intervention in Korea and the aggression against China (Formosa) by the United States.

"So-Called Command"

He said the invitation limits the discussion to the special report of the "so-called United Nations command which was engendered illegally by the Security Council under the manipulation by the United States during the absence of the two permanent members, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China, and whose report is therefore not only one-sided and malicious, but also unlawful and absolutely cannot be taken as a basis for discussion."

The Soviet Union and the Chinese Communists have contended that the Security Council decisions setting up the unified command last July were illegal because the Russians were not sitting and because the Nationalist Chinese delegation, recognized by the U. N., was at the table instead of the Chinese Communists.

Red Move to Probe Greek Sentences Beaten

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 11 (NYHT).—In an angry debate, the United Nations General Assembly Political Committee today beat down a Soviet proposal calling for Assembly President Nasrollah Entezam of Iran to negotiate with the Greek government "concerning the repeal of the death sentences passed by the military courts on Greek patriots." The vote was 31 to 6, with 12 abstentions.

Semyon K. Tsarapkin, Soviet delegate, charged that 2877 Greeks "live under death sentence" as a result of the Greek civil war.

Jean Politis, permanent Greek Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, vehemently declared that not a single death sentence had been carried out in Greece since October, 1949, after large-scale guerilla resistance had been crushed.

In contrast, he said, the Soviet Union and its Cominform associates had reestablished capital punishment since that time, and during this year there had been at least 104 death penalties for political reasons in Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Romania, most of which he said had been carried out.

Politis charged the special Soviet "solicitude" for the 19 Greeks was because they were "agents it would be difficult to replace." Afterward, Politis and other Greek delegates told a reporter all military death sentences were being reviewed and reduced under special legislation of last July, and Alexis Kyrou, permanent Greek U.N. delegate, estimated only about 1000 still remained in effect but suspended.

Allied Troops Gain 4 Miles

miles south of the reservoir. No attempt was made Saturday to move north.

The Leathernecks considered themselves lucky to have gained the plateau without a fight. A spokesman said that if the Reds had wanted to, "they could have fought it out on this line all winter."

Power Plants Taken

The Marines have captured all four hydroelectric plants below the Changjin reservoir. They said the last one they took, at Koto, was almost intact. A North Korean radio broadcast had claimed that Red troops dismantled the plants and carried away the parts.

The Changjin reservoir plants and four other plants below the Pujon reservoir, 15 miles to the northeast, supply electricity for much of North Korea and parts of Manchuria.

U. S. Seventh Division units were advancing toward the Pujon power plants. The most forward elements were reported 15 miles south of the reservoir.

Other elements of the seventh Division are north and west of Pungsan, 40 air miles south of the Manchurian border.

A Tenth Corps announcement said a Seventh Division patrol killed 25 to 100 Reds who attacked at 10 miles southwest of Kapsan. This would put the northernmost Seventh Division troops 23 air miles from the border.

The patrol fight was taken at Corps headquarters as evidence that the enemy might be preparing a defense line about the forty-first parallel, roughly a score of miles from the irregular frontier.

Heavy Air Blows Continue

On the northeast end of the Allied front, the South Korean Capital Division moved forward 15 miles to within 85 miles of the Siberian-Korean border.

Attack bombers from Navy Task Force 77 smashed at Yalu River bridges for the second straight day. The Navy said its planes made two bridges unusable, bombed the approaches of a third and damaged two others with direct hits from 1000-pound bombs.

The United States Fifth Air Force announced that one Russian-built MIG-15 jet fighter was shot down and two others probably were destroyed in dogfights with United States F-80 Shooting Star jets over Sinuiju on the northwest Korea border.

No American planes were damaged or lost in the encounter, the Air Force said.

Allied planes pounded targets at more than 50 points along the Korean-Manchurian border Friday, the Air Force said.

Edward Falck Resigns As NSRB Utilities Chief

Edward Falck has resigned as director of the Office of Energy and Utilities of the National Security Resources Board, it was learned last night. Officials of NSRB were hesitant to discuss the resignation, stating that an official announcement will be made Monday, when W. Stuart Symington, NSRB chairman, returns to Washington.

Falck joined NSRB in 1948, after a long history as a Government official and consultant on power and utilities operations. He is head of Edward Falck & Co., 1319 F st nw., private advisers to public utilities and power plants.

Early in the Roosevelt Administration, Falck was director of rates and research for the Tennessee Valley Authority, later becoming special assistant to the vice president of the Edison Co. in New York. During the war he was director of the Power Branch of the War Production Board, director of the Department of War Utilities, a consultant to the House Select Committee on Foreign Aid, director of the Office of Energy Controls of the Civilian Production Administration, and adviser to the Mexican Electric Power Commission. He lives in Chevy Chase.

U.S. Reaffirms No-Veto Stand On Red China

The State Department said yesterday the United States favors taking "all legitimate steps" to prevent seating the Chinese Communists in the United Nations, but has no veto power to block it.

The Department reiterated no consideration now is being given to recognition of the Chinese Red regime by the government.

The Department's views were expressed to Senator O'Conor (D., Md.), by Assistant Secretary of State Jack K. McFall. They outlined in reply to a protest O'Conor had filed with Secretary of State Acheson against any steps to admit Communist China to the United Nations.

O'Conor said McFall notified him that if the U. N. votes to seat Red China's representatives, this country will accept the will of the majority. McFall added, O'Conor said, such action would not constitute recognition of the Communist regime by the American Government.

No Key Items Going to China, Sawyer Says

NYHT News Service

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, replying to charges raised in Congress, yesterday said no strategic materials are going to Communist China but that China is sending us "significant" quantities of tungsten, tin and other items.

His statement obviously was provoked by the investigation by a Senate Interstate Commerce Subcommittee, although he made no direct mention of it.

The subcommittee's hearings have brought testimony that since June, Red China has received American shipments of wire rods, "mild" steel plates, radio tubes, 500,000 gallons of high-grade lubricating oil and other goods. In addition, the subcommittee claims to have uncovered evidence that some material went directly to North Korea in late 1949 and early 1950.

Sawyer said that in 1948 the United States exported to China 228,507 barrels of lubricating oil from January through March of this year, and only 1300 barrels since March. All shipments of aviation gasoline to China have stopped, he said.

The Secretary said strict controls were imposed on exports to China in March of this year. After the invasion of South Korea on June 25, he said, a complete embargo was immediately placed on exports of all goods to North Korea.

"As a further measure, no licenses whatsoever have been issued since that time for shipments of controlled commodities to mainland China and outstanding licenses have been revoked," he said.

The Sawyer statement disclosed that the following noncontrolled items have gone to China this year: $1,100,000 worth of machinery and vehicles through August and $400,000 worth of electrical machinery and apparatus, $500,000 worth of industrial machinery, $1,100,000 worth of chemicals and related products, $360,000 worth of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations, $100,000 worth of industrial chemicals, and one million dollars worth of metals and manufactures up to July.

Sawyer said the department's policy was to shut off military goods but "permit shipment of small quantities of goods necessary for the minimum needs of the Chinese economy so as not to penalize the civilian victims of the war in China."

Our exports to China, he said, have dropped from $273,400,000 in 1948 to 33 million dollars in the first eight months of 1950. Our imports have held up, however, according to the Secretary. Incoming supplies of tungsten, used in steel-making, have increased from 3,923,000 pounds in 1948 to 6,668,000 pounds in only the first half of this year.

Nepal Revolt Flares As King Flees to India

NEW DELHI, India, Nov. 11 (AP).—A revolt flared today in Nepal even as deposed King Tribhuvana Bir Bikram and his two queens arrived by plane in New Delhi to begin a life in exile.

The Nepalese Embassy here announced: "Raiders numbering 200, who traveled in trucks, clashed with Nepalese militia at Birganj in an effort to capture the military barracks. The fighting is still continuing."

Unconfirmed reports from Razaul on the Indian-Nepalese border, said the raid was made by armed supporters of the Nepalese Congress Party and that they captured the district governor and his family. The governor was described as a supporter of Prime Minister Surendra Bikram Shah, the "strong man" of the autocratic Nepalese government, who broke with the King this week.

Birganj is the second city of Nepal, a Himalayan state of six million persons, which is a buffer between part of India and Communist-invaded Tibet. Birganj lies 60 airline miles south of Katmandu, the capital and chief city.

The Nepalese Embassy said some of the raiders were former soldiers who once fought Allied troops in Malaya and Burma under a Japanese-backed Indian, Subhas Chandra Bose, in World War II.

The Nepalese Congress party, which derives inspiration from the Indian Congress Party, is one of the agencies struggling for increased democratic rule in Nepal—a move also desired by King Tribhuvana Bir Bikram.

The 44-year-old monarch fled to the Indian Embassy in Katmandu Monday with his two wives and several other members of his family. The government then placed his 3-year-old grandson, Prince Gyanendra, on what it called "the vacant throne." India offered the King a refuge. She has not recognized the crowning of the princely child.

West German Coal Shortage Hurts Output

FRANKFURT, Germany, Nov. 11 (AP).—American authorities today reported a coal shortage is crippling West Germany's production for western defense. The output of German coal is rising, but the demand for it is rising faster.

Many of the western orders for German industrial goods now pouring in as a result of the rearmament boom cannot be filled, the authorities said. The coal shortage also hampers the West German export drive, which is designed to make the republic free of American economic aid.

"Heavy industries will not get all the coal they want this winter," an Economic Cooperation Administration official said.

West German production, especially in steel, has been steadily rising under the impact of orders from American and West European nations since the Korean war started. As a result, industry is burning coal faster than the miners can produce it.

Coal production jumped during October to 365,000 tons daily from 354,000 tons in September. A daily output of 375,000 tons is expected the remainder of this year, compared with daily requirements of over 400,000 tons.

Rising industrial demands, heavy export commitments and winter stockpiling by household users have slashed coal reserves from two million tons in August to 10,000 tons.

Coal miners will work two extra days each month, and a coal "czar" has been appointed to insure that utilities and homes receive their full requirements.

East German Coal Mines Fall Short of Quota

BERLIN, Nov. 11 (NYHT).—Reports of production difficulties in the state-owned coal mines of East Germany were confirmed today when the Communist newspaper "Neues Deutschland" reported the mines had fallen short by 7 percent of fulfilling their quota for the year's third quarter.

Only in exceptional cases does East Germany announce a less than 100 percent quota fulfillment in any industry.

Replica Replaces Armistice Car in Compiegne Forest

PARIS, Nov. 11 (NYHT)—The 1918 Armistice Car, later the scene of Hitler's avengeful jig when receiving the Vichy French surrender in 1940, was replaced by a replica in the quiet of the Compiegne Forest today.

Hauled off to Berlin as a blitzkrieg prize, the original wagon restaurant in which Marshal Foch and the other Allied leaders met the generals of the Kaiser's crushed armies 32 years ago was destroyed in an RAF air raid during World War II.

The replacement has been faithfully rebuilt to show the seatings around the table over which the 1914-1978 conflict came to an end. But the branch line leading to the location in the forest clearing was torn up long ago. The new car had to be transported to the dedication ceremonies by truck and trailer.

Madrid Voices Thanks For U. N. Agency Action

MADRID, Nov. 11 (AP).—Generalissimo Francisco Franco's government has decided to express its thanks to the United Nations members whose vote November 4 ended the 4-year-old diplomatic ban against Spain.

Thirty-eight nations outvoted the Soviet bloc and several other countries to end the embargo and allow Spanish representation on U.N. specialized agencies. The Spanish cabinet, after a 15-hour session presided over by Franco, issued a communique announcing the decision to express gratitude.

Yugoslavia Closes, Seals Albanian Legation

BELGRADE, Nov. 11 (AP).—Yugoslavia broke off all but token diplomatic relations with tiny neighboring Albania today as the result of a feud touched off by the British-led Cominform's quarrel with Premier Marshal Tito.

A Yugoslavia Information Ministry spokesman said the Albanian legation here has been closed and sealed" and simultaneously made public the text of a note handed the Albanian representative here announcing both the action and the reason for it.

The note charged Albania has used the Belgrade legation not for "the conduct of current affairs and for settlement of existing issues between the two governments, but has utilized its existence exclusively to conduct offending and provocative activities against Yugoslavia."

The move marked the most spirited step Tito's government has yet taken against any of the Soviet satellites in retaliation for a Moscow-directed campaign that has included an economic boycott, political pressure and diplomatic insults.

Short of Outright Break

Yet it fell one step short of an outright diplomatic break — at least up to this point. The note said Yugoslavia has chosen the legations of Yugoslavia and Albania in Budapest, Hungary, "for the maintenance of diplomatic relations between the two countries."

In effect, this means each country will be without representatives in the other's capital to report first-hand information on the other's affairs.

Except for the delivery of the diplomatic note, the latest development in the Balkan cold war of nerves between this Communist nation and her Communist neighbors does not change the situation much.

The Yugoslav legation in Tirana, the Albanian capital, has been closed since July as a result of what this country termed persecution and discrimination against Yugoslav diplomatic representatives. Albania has maintained only a skeleton staff here for nearly two years.

For more than two years, the border between the two countries has been closed, with armed frontier guards on both sides on the alert. Road traffic has been cut off and communication by telephone and telegraph halted.

The bitterness of the situation has been sharpened by frequent border clashes, with each side blaming the other; by charges of espionage and sabotage; by claims of persecution of each other's nationals.

British Clamp Forces Peace Parley Shift

LONDON, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Sponsors of the Communist world "peace" congress, angrily accusing the British Government of sabotage, abandoned plans to meet in Sheffield Monday and switched the opening to November 16 in Warsaw.

The British "peace" committee acknowledged defeat after the government turned back an estimated two-thirds of the delegates arriving by air and sea and the British Labor Party scheduled a mammoth counter-demonstration next door to the Communist rally.

When the United States liner America docked at Southampton with additional congress delegates, it was sealed immediately and only immigration officials and special Scotland Yard security agents were permitted to board.

This was in line with Prime Minister Clement Attlee's order for Britain to close its traditionally hospitable doors to possible subversives. He said Britain could not afford guests who might burn down the house.

Visas were refused to Soviet composer Dmitri Shostakovitch and Soviet writer Ilya Ehrenburg. French atomic scientist Frederic Joliot-Curie was turned back at Dover today. Of some 2100 delegates, only about 700 were expected to squeeze through the screen.

Actually only two delegations, a total of 11 persons, had reached Sheffield—one from Iceland, the other from Canada. Dr. James Endicott, leader of the Canadians, said he was not a Communist, and was interested in the congress only from "a Christian angle."

He said delegates here will meet informally at the steel city of Sheffield Monday and then proceed to Warsaw. The Polish Government will pay all expenses of transportation to Warsaw, he said.

It was more than 30 minutes before some of the 140 passengers on the America not connected with the congress were allowed ashore. Among them were Charles M. Spofford, United States chairman of the Atlantic Pact deputies council, his wife and two children, Peggy, 11, and John, 8.

FAO Extends Terms of Dodd and Bruce, Offers Aid in Rehabilitation of Korea

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization yesterday virtually wound up its affairs in the United States. It will move to Rome in January.

Before the FAO conference closed its short session it:

1. Extended the terms of Norris E. Dodd as director-general and Viscount Bruce of Melbourne as independent chairman of the council for one year.

2. Offered its assistance to the U. N. in the relief and rehabilitation of Korea.

3. Trimmed the budget for next year by 10 percent, or from five million to 4½ million dollars. However, the delegates told Dodd he could raise his sights to five million if he can collect that much. Member contributions have always fallen behind the amount pledged.

Community Co-op Proposed

4. Heard a proposal by the International Cooperative Alliance for FAO to assist the organization of an international commodity cooperative.

U. S. Agriculture Undersecretary Clarence J. McCormick protested against the cut in the budget. "We stress the importance of an expansion in the regular budget for 1952 and 1953," McCormick said.

The cut in the total budget will serve to increase the United States' proportion of the cost of FAO. At present this country is contributing about 27 percent of a five-million-dollar budget. As this country's contribution remains the same, it will increase the proportion to 30 percent.

A moving appeal for help for his country was made by P. W. Han, delegate from Korea, at the closing session. "Winter is upon us already," he said, "and we have the appalling task of feeding millions of homeless people and contributing shelter for them.

"Meantime," he continued, "the fighting continues. It all adds to a bleak and grisly outlook."

Much of Rice Crop Saved

Much of the rice crop has fortunately been saved, Han said, "but there is considerable disruption in harvesting the crop, due to military operations. Furthermore, getting the crop to the consumers and feeding the refugees and the homeless are tasks of no small magnitude."

"It is difficult if not impossible to compute the sum total of human misery," Han said. "We need help. We need it desperately. We need it as soon as it can be rushed to us. Our situation is beyond being acute.

"But despite the ruination of their country, the Korean people still have hope, and, even more, they have the will to work. They are not despondent because they know the entire civilized world responded to them in their hour of peril."

The conference also granted "consultative status" to the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. This organization was described as "the voice of the Protestant World" and is sponsored by the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council.

Arbenz Has Big Lead in Guatemala

COL. JACOBO ARBENZ GUZMAN
. . . leads in voting

GUATEMALA CITY, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Lieut. Col. Jacobo Arbenz, Guzman, 36, administration presidential candidate, held a commanding lead tonight in Guatemala's three-day presidential election which began yesterday.

Unofficial returns from the first day's polling gave Arbenz, candidate of the large left-wing Revolutionary Action Party (PAR), and of two smaller parties, 131,947 votes.

Gen. Miguel Idigoras, 60, right-wing candidate of the Redemption and (anti-Communist Unification parties, was in second place with 29,284 votes.

Arbenz' better than 4-to-1 lead over his nearest rival was confirmed tonight by the latest official count giving him 96,508 votes, Idigoras 22,627, and Garcia Granados 9662.

Next among the 10 presidential candidates came Jorge Garcia Granados, 50, who broke with the administration to start his own opposition People's Party, with 11,944 votes in the unofficial returns.

Polling will end tomorrow. Order was reported throughout Guatemala. The winner will succeed President Juan Jose Arevalo, whose six-year term ends March 15, 1951.

Arbenz resigned as Arevalo's defense minister last June to run for the presidency. He has the support of labor unions and while avowedly anti-Communist, he has not repudiated Communist support.

Colonel to Lecture

Col. Julian E. Raymond, commanding officer of Fort Lesley J. McNair, will give an illustrated lecture on "The Assassination of Lincoln" at 4 p. m. today in Copley Hall, Georgetown University. The lecture is sponsored by Beta Pi Chapter of Phi Alpha Theta, National Honorary History Fraternity, and is open to the public.

Egypt Premier Ousts Three In Cabinet

CAIRO, Egypt, Nov. 11 (AP).—Three members of the all-Wafdist Cabinet of Premier Mustafa Nahas Pasha were ousted today in a government reshuffle.

The changes reportedly resulted from a disagreement between Finance Minister Zaki el Motaal and his colleagues over the minister's opposition to inflationary policies.

The newspaper Albalagh said El Motaal "refused to resign" and the Premier was "compelled to oust him."

The following Cabinet changes were listed:

Fouad Serag Fddin Pasha becomes Finance Minister as well as retaining the Interior Minister portfolio.

Ahmed Hamza Bey shifts from Agriculture to Supply Minister.

Abedel Latif Mahmoud Bey, former Health Minister, becomes Agriculture Minister.

Hamed Zaki former State Minister becomes National Economy Minister.

Aba Abdel Gawad Hussein and Ismail Ramsi Pasha, not members of the previous Cabinet appointed Health and Wakes Ministers respectively.

French Hit at Seized Outpost; Ho Chi Minh May Be Casualty

SAIGON, Indo-China, Nov. 11 (AP).—French troops slashed out today in a drive to recapture an outpost of Moncay, which they gave up yesterday to Viet Minh forces of Soviet-trained Ho Chi Minh.

The French listed Ho Chi Minh himself as a "possible casualty" of a French air attack yesterday at another point, the town of Langxa, but emphasized they had no certain proof.

Military sources said the counter-attack was aimed at a post 10 miles northwest of Moncay, eastern coastal anchor of the recently shortened North Indo-China defense line.

The Communist-led Viet Minh troops, in forcing the evacuation of the post, had suffered heavy casualties, a French spokesman said.

However, they were reported harrassing both ends of the defense line, dropping several shells inside the important fortress of Moncay, on the east coast, and massing forces around Dinh Lap, western terminal fortress 100 miles away.

The military spokesman said Ho Chi Minh may have been in Langxa, 130 miles northwest of Hanoi.

Valentine Warns Public on Inflation

Copyright 1950 by United Press

Americans must get up in arms and fight inflation voluntarily or take their choice between high prices and rigid controls, Economic Stabilizer Alan Valentine said yesterday.

There can be no compromise, he told the United Press in an exclusive interview.

He did not propose any specific pattern of "self-controls" but was particularly critical of the "let George do it" attitude of people who think controls should apply to everyone but themselves.

Waits on Public Action

He insisted that mandatory price and wage controls should not be imposed until the public has been given a fair chance to prove whether it is willing to control itself.

In furtherance of this, he proposed the Government give a guilding hand to such a program through savings bond campaigns, newspaper and radio publicity, and enlisting the cooperation of labor unions, women's clubs and social and economic groups.

He said that if this, and the limited controls already issued, fail, price and wage regulations would seem inevitable.

He said that contrary to the belief of some pressure groups, "it seems to me," he added, "that Congress clearly intended the two be tied together" when it passed the Defense Production Act.

Rests on Budget

On the general economic outlook, Valentine attached great importance to the size of the fiscal 1952 Federal budget which President Truman will send to Congress in January. Current reports place the military portion at 55 billion dollars and other costs of operating the Government at 25 billion dollars.

It already has been pointed out that the big upsurge in Federal spending that this implies will create shortages of materials which will push prices up and result in wage demands to meet the ever-higher cost of living.

Valentine warned that if this threatened inflationary chain develops, he would be required to impose controls.

Wiley Asks Immediate Inflation Probe

Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.) yesterday proposed an immediate double-barrelled investigation of the "grave" inflationary situation that "threatens to blow the roof off our economy."

He asked Senate Banking Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.) and House Banking Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) to call their committees immediately to take a nonpolitical look at the inflationary effects of the rearmament program.

But Maybank, in a statement released by his office, said his committee already has had to postpone hearings on one phase of the inflation problem until the week of November 27 when Congress is scheduled to reconvene. He said committee members have commitments which make it impossible for them to attend hearings before then.

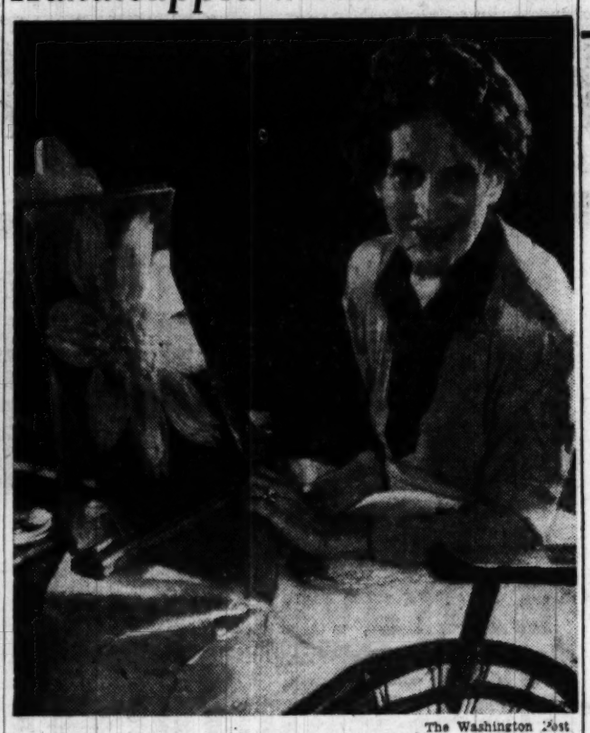
Handicapped Woman Is Artist



The Washington Post

BEGAN PAINTING AT SEVENTY—Mrs. Claudia Emma C. Ohlsen, 74, of 1126 South Thomas st., Arlington, Va., is shown with one of her paintings to be entered in the first annual Golden Age Hobby Show for people over 60, to be held beginning November 17, in the lobby of the Commerce Department building. She is paralyzed in her right side from a stroke suffered two years ago, is blind in the left eye and her left leg has been amputated. Despite these handicaps, she taught herself to paint with her left hand after her right arm became paralyzed

All this business about life begins at 40 is sheer hokum.

Life begins at 60, or can, aver some people hereabouts who are proving it by offering Washington its first annual Golden Age Hobby Show.

Aforesaid show comes off November 17, 18, 19 and 20 from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. in the lobby of the Commerce Department. It is free and is being sponsored jointly by the District of Columbia Recreation Board and United Community Services.

Already, at show headquarters at 3149 16th st. nw., entries in the show are pouring in. Things like collections of tea bags, giant ocarinas, candle stick holders made of old door-knobs, oil paintings.

Despite these handicaps, Mrs. Ohlsen didn't succumb to idleness. She still had a good left hand, taught herself to paint, and will enter some of her work in the show.

The executive committee of the hobby show reports that these exhibits are being submitted by everybody from former commissioners to residents of public homes for the aged—and they love it.

On a more sober side, the show's sponsors point out that it can create a greater public awareness for the problems of those over 60.

"Not only are their problems economic and leisure-time ones, but also family-adjustment, housing, education and health. The Hobby Show can become an instrument in awakening a greater sense of responsibility among our citizens to help our older people meet these problems."

Missouri Alumni Fete

The University of Missouri Alumni Association will sponsor a ham breakfast at noon Sunday, November 19, at the Lee House, 15th and L sts. nw.

Taft Is Heavy Favorite With State Chairmen As Republican Presidential Candidate for '52

it," he said. "He didn't have to fight a million dollars put up by the CIO."

Arizona Chairman Col. M. J. Evjen, who picked Eisenhower, Taft and Stassen as his choices, in that order, said his State delegation "wouldn't give Dewey a vote." The same goes, he said, for Duff and Warren.

New York Chairman William Pfeiffer said the State GOP delegation is still for General Ike, if he will take it.

Typical comments from the Republican chairmen included:

Wayne Hood, Wisconsin—Taft out in front now, but Eisenhower might take it.

Robert Goodwin, Iowa—Taft, Warren, Duff and Dewey "all about even for 1952."

Robert McDougle, West Virginia—"I pick Taft."

Mrs. Sturgeon McCoy, Idaho vice chairman—"No question that Taft, Mr. Republican himself, is a standout in the crowd. He made a well-organized, high type, factual campaign, free of mud-slinging. But Republicans should not discount Eisenhower. The American people are hunting for security, and he is a strong, intelligent personality with military background who could get the popular vote."

Milton Rue, North Dakota—"Taft first, Duff second among Tuesday's winners."

Ray Bliss, Ohio—"If Senator Taft is interested, he would in my opinion be the logical person for the Republican nomination in 1952. He took the issues to the voters in Ohio this year and won. That is the type of aggressive campaigning we need in '52."

T. H. Delap, California—"Warren is the choice of any good California Republican."

A Pratt Kesler, Utah—"Taft, Warren, Duff and Dewey, in that order."

Mrs. Marshall Cornett, Oregon Committeewoman—"Taft on the basis of his showing in Ohio. He is the greatest statesman of them all. Warren and Duff will be in the picture, however."

Owen J. Cleary, Michigan—"The Republican Party's inspiring victory in the recent elections enhanced both Dewey's and Duff's stature as leaders of our party."

Ralph C. Masterman, Maine—"The way things stand now, Taft appears to be stronger, but I was also very much impressed with Warren's vote-getting."

Ewing T. Kerr, Wyoming—Taft, Dewey, Warren and Duff, I like them all and I can support any of them.

Kansas Chairman C. I. Moyer was not available, but Senator Harr Darby, one of the most influential Republicans in the State, commented that "as of today, Bob Taft has the best chance. He proved he is a vote getter. Of course, Ike Eisenhower is a Kansan, and if he is interested we're for him."

Georgia and Mississippi leaders put Eisenhower on top of their presidential lists, while Tennessee, South Carolina and Texas leaned toward Taft.

Col. Williams Takes Control Of Pentagon

Colonel Ernest A. Williams, 60, has assumed control of the Pentagon as Army Headquarters Commandant, replacing Col. W. B. Van Auken.

Announcement of the change was made yesterday by the Military District of Washington. Colonel Williams formerly was a member of the Physical Evaluation Board at Walter Reed Hospital. He served during World War I and was integrated into the regular Army in November, 1917.

In 1946, Colonel Williams was named Chief of Staff for the Korea Base Command and later became Commanding Officer of the Third Medium Port at Inchon.

Auto School Teaches Army How to Drive

A group of 10 Wacs and 20 enlisted men from the U. S. Army Motor Center is learning its ABCs of driving at the traffic school conducted by Metropolitan Police.

Required to attend two-hour classes each Saturday for three weeks, the group will complete the concentrated course on traffic regulations, driving courtesy and basic accident causes this Saturday.

Col. A. J. Montgomery, assistant commanding officer of the motor center, announced yesterday that he plans to send all of the 225 drivers of the center, located at the Pentagon and Fort Myer, through the school.

The school, conducted by Police Sergt. Aubrey S. Yowaiski, was set up almost three years ago, primarily for the benefit of careless drivers but available to others as well. More than 8000 persons have completed its six-hour course since then.

Many of them attended classes on instructions from the presiding judge in Traffic Court. Others have attended voluntarily—the course is open to anyone.

Several organizations, such as the American Red Cross here and the Super Concrete Co., 3058 K st. nw., have sent their drivers through as a group.

Elections Reveal Truman, Taft Top Political Contenders

more prestige than he had in '48, when he went down before the Dewey blitz at Philadelphia. He also has a reputation as a vote-getter. His majority last week was 430,000, a new record for a senatorial race in Ohio.

His triumph against the labor unions, which had marked him as Enemy No. 1 and massed their strength to beat him, appears to have sent a victory impulse all through the Middle West corn belt.

It was in this area—a region where sentiment is strong against "Me-tooism" in the GOP—that the Republicans scored their most striking victories. And that is something that the Taft people are not going to let the party soon forget.

In the minds of many, it would seem a strange contradiction that Taft could be called "Mr. Republican" and yet be denied the Republican nomination for President in 1952.

The fact is, however, that the Republican Party, like the Democratic Party, is sharply divided, and Taft is a hero only in one wing of it. Consequently, he will have a real fight on his hands if he seeks to be the party's standard-bearer.

Governor Dewey, in a speech at the Mayflower here in 1949, said the party was "split wide open" and had been "split wide open for years.' If it tried to outpromise and outspend the Democrats, he said, it would be a betrayal of both party and country. On the other hand, he said, if it tried to go back to the 1920s, it would be "the deadest pigeon in cwthe country." He seemed to be arguing for a middle course.

Knockdown Battle

The New Yorker, who has recaptured some of his own lost prestige, didn't mention names that night, and neither did he try to delineate the cleavage in the party. So far as politicians were concerned, he didn't have to.

A month before that, at a meeting of the Republican National Committee in Omaha, there was a knockdown battle between the opposing forces in the GOP. The Taft people were determined to kick out Hugh Scott, Dewey's hand-picked chairman. They failed then, but only by a few votes.

In the summer of 1949, after Scott had voluntarily stepped out, the Taft forces elected Guy Gabrielson as national chairman. Gabrielson, who turned out to be a prophet last Tuesday, has observed a policy of neutrality in party conflicts. There was no doubt at the time, however, that his election was a victory for "Mr. Republican."

One of the chief arguments of the Taft people in this fight was "Me-tooism," an epithet that was flung at Dewey. It was intended as a denunciation of all those in the party who sympathized with Dewey for embracing some of the Roosevelt and Truman policies, domestic and foreign.

A lot of water will go over the political dam between now and 1952, but right now a healing of the split in the GOP seems no more likely than a love feast between Fair Dealers and Dixiecrats.

The hope of many Republicans is that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower can be persuaded to throw his hat in the ring. Governor Dewey has said he will support him for the nomination. The Taft forces might put up a fight, but Ike would be hard to stop in a convention hungry for a winner.

The fact is, however, that there is no more certainty about Ike running now than there was in advance of 1948. Some who know him well, have expressed the opinion that he never will run.

If Ike does stay out, and the fight is confined to the professionals, two men besides Taft and Dewey will be influential figures (and maybe candidates) at the 1952 convention.

Gov. Earl Warren of California, who has just whipped Jimmy Roosevelt to win another term at Sacramento is one, and the other is Gov. James H. Duff of Pennsylvania, who has won a seat in the United States Senate.

Warren, of course, was Dewey's running mate in 1948. Duff fought Dewey at the Philadelphia convention, and threw his support to Taft. He did so, however, "to indicate just how much he didn't want Dewey."

That quoted line comes from a biographical sketch of Duff that was put out by one of his aides at the Governors Conference at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., in June. It had appeared in the Watertown (N. Y.) Daily Times a month earlier, and explained what Duff really had against Dewey.

Duff, the article said, wanted to support Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, but never got a chance.

As for Dewey, Duff admired the New Yorker as an administrator and "felt deeply the philosophy of political progressivism that (he) so tunefully talked." Why then did Duff insist on fighting Dewey after the Grundy forces of Pennsylvania went over to him and clinched the nomination for him?

The article explained:

"It was because Duff detected in Dewey's brand of liberalism an element of what Duff regarded as the spurious. Duff reasoned . . . that if Dewey was a bona fide liberal, he would not be seeking the support of known reactionaries like the Pennsylvania Old Guard. But Dewey was seeking that support. Therefore, the New Yorker was more interested in being President than in being right, and, that being so, he was not deserving of the backing of true progressives."

Duff, an old Teddy Roosevelt Bull Mooser, talks like a man who would need a lot of persuading before he would line up behind Taft at the next convention.

Ambulance Man Is 'Sentenced' to Drivers' School

An Emergency Hospital ambulance driver was sent to the Police Department's traffic school yesterday after colliding with another car Thursday at 15th st. and Potomac ave. se.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark King told James Payne, 40, to attend the school in lieu of a court trial after holding a hearing.

The driver of the other car in the collision, Mrs. Elizabeth Harvey, 35, of Akron, Ohio, was allowed to forfeit $20 collateral.

King said Payne was on an emergency run when the accident occurred, and that Payne had a spotless record as a driver.

Maryland Vote Poses Constitutional Puzzle

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The fate of Maryland's outdated State Constitution, with its favoritism toward rural areas in the Legislature, hangs on a legal technicality as a result of last week's referendum in the general election.

Of those who voted on the question, a 2-1 majority favored calling a constitutional convention to streamline the document. But the trouble is that no more than 350,000 persons bothered to vote on the issue, whereas more than 600,000 voted in the race for Governor.

The question is this: Does the law require a majority of all those voting, or merely of those voting on the constitution issue to bring about the convention?

Twenty years ago the same problem arose when Marylanders voted by a slim majority for a new convention (the constitution requires that the question be submitted to the voters every two decades). But the State Senate pigeonholed the measure to set up the convention on the grounds that a majority of all voters that year wasn't for it.

The law says that the Assembly must provide by law for the convention and for the election of delegates thereto "if a majority of voters of such election" votes for a convention. But it's not clear just what "such election" means.

Attorney General Hall Hammond won't offer an opinion, he said last week, until the problem is legally before him—if then.

Both parties are pledged to the convention idea, but a lot can happen when the Assembly gets around to voting on whether to set it up.

The major issue for such a convention is the need to alter the representation system in the Assembly. At present each county and each of Baltimore City's six legislative districts has a State Senator—a system something like the United States Senate.

But, unlike the House of Representatives, the Maryland Assembly's House of Delegates bears little relation to the population of the counties.

Ratio in Big Counties

Baltimore City and the State's three most populous counties (Baltimore, Prince Georges and Montgomery) have 67.3 percent of the State's population, according to the 1950 census. But they have only 43.9 percent of the delegates—54 out of 123.

(In the Senate, these counties have only 9 of 29 members—31 percent of the representation).

Under the law, the 1950 census would have brought about an automatic change in the Assembly membership, adding about 10 seats for the middle-sized counties in the State. But Baltimore and the big counties already have the limit of delegates, six each for the big counties. So all sides agreed to another constitutional amendment approved last week, the one freezing the Assembly membership. The theory was that a new plan would be worked out by the constitutional convention.

Now it's not at all certain whether there will be a constitutional convention.

The total vote cast Tuesday is available from some areas. Here are samples from big and little counties as well as from Baltimore City:

Heavy Majorities

Baltimore City: 98,185 for and 16,642 against; Montgomery County: 13,973 for and 1914 against; Prince Georges County: 11,212 for and 2630 against.

On the other hand, Kent County cast 549 votes for and 811 against; Garrett County 694 for and 865 against, and Wicomico County 1463 for and 2844 against. These three small counties now have a total of three Senators and nine Assemblymen, compared with the Montgomery-Prince Georges total of two Senators and 12 Assemblymen.

Even if the constitution convention is finally ordered by the Legislature, the battle for more representation for the State's populous areas will only begin. For the constitution now provides that the Legislature shall determine how to choose convention delegates.

Thus, the rural areas now controlling the Assembly could stack the odds in any convention by approving a method of selecting delegates that is tailor-made to the liking of the rural counties.

Fondahl Gets Plan to Train Women for CD

A proposal to train civil defense volunteers in the fundamentals of nursing was sent to the District commissioners yesterday by John E. Fondahl, acting civil defense director.

Fondahl said the District chapter of the American Red Cross has agreed to start a 30-hour course of instruction for women November 27 on how to recognize and give emergency treatment for shock, burns, radiation sickness and other injuries that an atomic attack might cause.

These women would pass on the instruction in 12-hour courses to other groups in their home areas, he reported. He said the Red Cross could take two classes of 15 members, drawn preferably from the civil defense warden organization, for the two-week course starting November 27.

In another civil defense matter, Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, District engineer commissioner, said he expected the citizens advisory committee to work with the commissioners on civil defense planning will be formed next week.

Pickets Let Girls Earn Holiday Pay

mac Telephone Co., 713 13th st. nw., from around 7 to 8 a. m.

Despite the prospect of double-time pay, a number of operators refused to pass through the picket line until it was broken up by the local union leaders, who got wind of the "insurrection."

Harry Lentz, co-leader of the 310 striking Western Electric workers here, said that pickets will be withheld again today from C. & P. buildings, again to permit the employes to work for the Sunday premium pay, but that picketing of some C. & P. buildings would be resumed Monday. Picketing, meanwhile, will be limited to Western Electric buildings here, according to Lentz.

Teamsters Honor Lines

The 10 union pickets yesterday received a "lift" from an AFL union. Charles Bell, business agent for AFL Teamsters Local 639, announced that truck-driver members of his union would refuse to drive through the picket lines.

Bell said that it was the tradition of the teamsters union for its members to respect the authorized picket line of legitimate unions, whether or not they were affiliated with the AFL.

C & P officials here maintained that all services were running at normal, with 51,470 long-distance calls handled on Friday despite the picketing of the strikers cut a number of the long-distance operators.

Elsewhere around the country, the 17,000 striking Western Electric workers—who are seeking a more substantial increase than the 11 cents an hour raise they've been offered and a one-year contract instead of a proposed 18-months agreement—continued their "hit-skip" picketing tactics.

Backfield Shift

To make up for the lack of numbers, the Western Electric have been shifting pickets from one building to another. Union spokesmen say that as a result of this tactic, 87,000 other Bell workers have stayed off the job in honoring the picket lines.

Joseph Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers of America, charged in New York that some Bell companies were resorting to what he called a "lock-out." He said that operators who refused to cross picket lines at Peoria, Ill., were not permitted to return to work by the company the following day when picket lines had been removed.

A phone company official branded the charge as "silly" and insisted: "We're encouraging operators to come to work."

A clash was reported in Philadelphia, when strikers fought with flying wedges of police, who cleared the way for trucks to get out of two picketed warehouses. No injuries were reported. Union officials protested what they termed strike-breaking activity by police. City authorities insisted the police were only to prevent disturbances.

In New York, 38 pay phones in Pennsylvania Station were blanked out after their mouthpiece diaphragms were removed. Other phones were ripped from booths in taverns and stores near the Western Electric warehouse in Manhattan.

Pickets withdrew temporarily from the manually operated phone exchange at Mount Holly, N. J., near Fort Dix, to permit soldiers to make their calls before leaving on weekend furloughs.

Meanwhile, 16,000 Michigan Bell employes also continued their strike through the third day. This group is seeking more substantial pay increases than the $2 and $3 a week offered by the company.

place a wreath on behalf of President Syngman Rhee of the Republic of Korea.

Many veterans and patriotic organizations laid wreaths at the tomb during the day.

Warren L. Granger, of Alexandria, acting national commandant of the Marine Corps League laid a wreath, in the form of the Marine Corps insignia, at the base of the tomb at 2:45 p. m. The Marine Corps color bearers and color guard were present.

French Ambassador Henri Bonnet participated in wreath-laying by the French War Veterans at 3 p. m.

Religious services were held at churches throughout the city during the day. A military memorial mass, sponsored by the Prince Georges Council, Knights of Columbus, is scheduled for 11 a. m. today in the University of Maryland stadium, College Park.

In other parts of the country and in most Western nations Armistice Day was observed with speeches and parades.

Gen. Thomas T. Handy, commander of the United States Army's European command, said we can pay no greater tribute to the dead than "to pledge ourselves anew to carry on their battle for peace and freedom."

In Paris, jet fighter planes streaked low over the Champs Elysees as President Vincent Auriol placed a wreath on the tomb of the French Unknown Soldier under the Arc de Triomphe. Charles E. Bohlen, minister of the United States Embassy in Paris, then laid an American wreath on the tomb. Armistice Day in France is known as 'Jour de la Victoire Francaise."

One-half of the 42 linotype machines will be moved today, with the other half to go after midnight tonight when Monday's paper is in type.

The linotype machines alone weigh approximately 95 tons. The balance of the heavy composing room equipment accounts for another 200 tons.

Starting at 3 this afternoon, 12 departments are to move on a staggered schedule, with the newsroom and printers the last to go.

The telegraph machines which carry on endless stream of news from all parts of the world will be silenced only about 7 hours, and then at the slack period after 2 a. m. Monday.

The Associated Press, United Press, New York Rerald Tribune and Western Union teletype machines will be rushed to the new building for installation before 9 a. m., according to present plans.

A newspaper office without telephones would be like a paperhanger without hands, so steps have been taken to assure complete continuity of service

Chief Post Operator Miss Mary Parker, a staffer of 32 years standing, will join Eugene Meyer, Chairman of The Post Board, in officially opening the new building switchboard, which from then on will handle all incoming calls. The telephone number remains the same—National 4200.

The Washington Post started its life in broken-down rented quarters at 914 Pennsylvania ave. on Dec. 6, 1877. Within a year it outgrew the premises and moved to the National Union newspaper building at 339 Pennsylvania ave. In 1880 the Post moved to a 3½-story brick building at 10th and D sts. nw., where it remained until 1893 when it move to the E street location. The E street building underwent two major additions, the final one completed in 1936.

The E street property will become a parking lot unless the Federal Government wants it for office space.

This was announced three weeks ago by William B. Willard, a trustee for the Willard estate, which owns the property.

If the Government does want the building for office space, Willard explained, the plans for turning the site into a parking lot will be voided.

Catholics Ban 'Beboppers'

illicit sex relationships, shoplifting and other petty thievery.

Wolke said he has been investigating bebop gangs "for about a year.

"Bebop itself is just a fad," he said, "but some of the bebop gangs are like the zoot suit gangs you read about on the West Coast a few years back, although probably not as bad."

Wolke said beboppers try to emulate in apparel and mannerisms the band leaders and musicians who have become the high priests of the cult. Some bebop musicins have adopted Mohammedanism.

Wolke said the average bebopper is 17 years old, but that they range in age from 14 to 19. He said boys wear thick-rimmed glasses, flashy sports jackets, and trousers with wide pleats and narrow cuffs.

They also wear "ducktail" haircuts—long hair combed straight back, parted down the back of the head with the ends coming together at the neckline.

The girls wear jackets, tight-fitting long skirts and saddle shoes.

Wolke said two girls 15 and 16 years old who are in a juvenile home admitted belonging to a bebop group that required its members to indulge in sex promiscuity and shoplifting.

He said the two girls admitted having sex relations with Negro boys who belonged to the group.

Shigemitsu Parole

Mamoru Shigemitsu was the Foreign Minister of Japan who signed the surrender on the Missouri. He then became one of the war criminals, and was put on trial with other Japanese notables. He got seven years in jail, and never was there a more foolish miscarriage of justice, or a more egregious truckling to the Russians, who had demanded his indictment and punishment because, as Ambassador to Moscow, he had incurred their dislike. Ever since the sentence was delivered, in November, 1948, this newspaper has pleaded the case for a pardon, and now we are pleased to note that Mr. Shigemitsu has been given a parole. He has been in custody since April 29, 1946.

The fact that the chief prosecutor, Mr. Joseph B. Keenan, says that Mr. Shigemitsu should not have been put on trial, let alone convicted, is the best testimony to the travesty. Shigemitsu is a proven friend of the Western world. We dare say that, in spite of the injustice which has been done to him, he is still our friend. It is upon men like him that we ought to be depending for the guidance of Japan toward paths of peace and cooperation.

Communism And Terror

Soon after news of the recent attempt to assassinate President Truman reached Union Square, New York, there appears to have been a hurried meeting of the American politburo in the upper story of the headquarters at 50 East 13th st. The result was the statement signed by William Z. Foster, national chairman of the Communist Party, and Gus Hall, national secretary, expressing their shock and horror at what had occurred.

The effort to kill the President, they said, could only have been the work of madmen or agents provocateurs. On the whole they inclined to the latter theory. The story sounded to them like a monstrous Fascist frame-up, like the burning of the Reichstag in Berlin in the early days of the Nazi regime. The idea of such frame-ups of course is to try to persuade the simple-minded and gullible that Communists are not the most law-abiding, peace-loving, mild-mannered folk in the world. However, few would be fooled, because it is "well known that the Communist Party condemns and rejects assassination and all acts of violence and terror."

The statement doubtless seemed necessary because the Communists in Puerto Rico had united with the Nationalist Party in that island in a demand for immediate independence. Indeed, there have been reports, affirmed by the present Governor, Dr. Munoz Marin, that the Communists have been egging the Nationalists on to insurrection. This, of course, would accord with the Communist policy of fostering discontent and making trouble wherever possible, and also with their policy of doing so, when they can, behind some sort of non-Communist facade. There is, it is true, no real ideological affinity between the Puerto Rican Nationalists and the Puerto Rican Communists, and any working alliance between them would hardly survive five minutes after independence had been achieved.

It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that the working alliance between Nationalists and Communists in Puerto Rico has been ended by the attempted assassination or by the statement of Comrades Foster and Hall. This was made clear by an editorial in a later issue of the Daily Worker, devoted to the sufferings endured by the Puerto Ricans throughout "52 years of alien rule."

> After 52 years of domination, this proud, cultured people has been reduced to unrelieved suffering, despair and bitter anger. They dream of their independence, of the right to speak Spanish in their schools, and of the right to be a free nation making their own laws and developing their own industry and culture . . . Instead of granting to Puerto Rico the independence we deprived it of in 1898, we have systematically kept the Puerto Ricans tied to Wall Street financial power.

This, of course, is precisely what the Nationalist propaganda has been saying. The difference is that the Nationalists mean it, and the Communists do not. The Nationalists may not know exactly what they would do with independence if they got it, but they know very well what they don't like and it includes both the Yankees and the English language. The Communists would like to see the Nationalists gain power in the island because it would be a fairly easy matter to take it away from them after they got it. This much, however, is probably beyond their hopes; they appear to be going on the principle that the more trouble they can make in Puerto Rico the more they are contributing to advancement of the ambitions of the Kremlin elsewhere in the world.

Still, the Daily Worker does not withdraw its condemnation of terrorism as a political weapon, although it does its best in an accompanying news story to give the impression that the real terrorists are not the Nationalists but the government of Munoz Marin. Terrorism, says the editorial unctiously, "is typically the weapon not of the people but of reaction." Besides, individual acts of terrorism are contrary to the canons of Marxism. And, indeed, it is true that Marxism does discountenance violence for its own sake, or what the Bakuninite anarchists used to call "propaganda by deed." But where violence and even assassination is necessary to some end deemed important by the Kremlin, the party has no difficulty in swallowing its Marxist scruples, as it did, for example, in the murder of Leon Trotsky or in the kidnaping of Gen. Karlovich Miller.

Yugoslav Needs

The Administration has acted wisely in putting together a stopgap 35-million-dollar food program for stricken Yugoslavia. Near-starvation there is a fact of great consequence, irrespective of the cause. It is to the American interest to relieve the situation, for strategic as well as humanitarian reasons. The continuation of the breach between Marshal Tito and the Moscow Politburo is particularly important when the Western world is strained elsewhere; Tito has newly reaffirmed his support of the United Nations against aggression. Were the pleas for help to be spurned and economic disintegration to set in, not only would Yugoslav armed forces be gravely weakened to withstand Cominform assault, but Tito might even be forced back into the arms of the Kremlin.

At the same time, however, there is no reason for American policy-makers to be deluded as to the real cause of the trouble. Unquestionably Yugoslavia, with other Balkan countries, is suffering the effects of a severe drought. But Yugoslavia would have been in difficulty without the drought because of her insistence on maintaining her five-year industrialization plan as a sort of show-window of "pure" communism after the breach with Moscow. This breach prevented imports of 392 million dollars worth of capital goods from behind the Iron Curtain. Yet even after the economic blockade and the drastic reorientation of Yugoslav trade, the Tito government continued excessive expenditures for capital goods. As a result, foreign exchange was reduced almost to the vanishing point, and there was no cushion for emergency purchases such as food.

Meanwhile, there has been little for the people to buy, and the lack of incentive goods has led to a high rate of absenteeism in industry. Yugoslavia, moreover, also has suffered from a dearth of technical advice. Production has actually fallen in critical industries. Add to this the depressing effects of collectivized agriculture among independent-minded peasants. The result is considerable dissatisfaction among the Yugoslav people. Fortunately, there has been frank criticism in the Communist press, and the Tito government now seems to be shaking off some of the more doctrinaire aspects of its approach.

Naturally, these are matters of extreme delicacy in relations between the United States and Yugoslavia, for this country must avoid anything smacking of interference in Yugoslavia's internal affairs. But Tito must be given to understand that while the United States is anxious to relieve hunger, it has no inclination to assume a permanent burden. Congress is likely to look critically at additional expenditures unless there is assurance that they will be used for genuinely productive ends. There is no obligation upon American taxpayers to subsidize Tito's authoritarian experiment.

Campaigning By Frank

It would be interesting to know how many of the Senators and Representatives returned to office last week owe their victory to use of the franking privilege. Certainly an enormous volume of campaign propaganda went into the mails without the payment of postage. Some members seem to rely chiefly upon flooding their districts with franked mail, and in the rural areas this method of campaigning is said to be especially effective. It places candidates running without the advantage of the mailing frank at a serious disadvantage.

While the unfairness of giving the "ins" free use of the frank and denying it to the "outs" is obvious, the question of what to do about it is far from simple. There have been suggestions that the privilege ought to be extended to candidates running for Congress, but most people, we suspect, would regard this as an extension of the abuse rather than its elimination. Then, too, difficult questions would arise as to whether the frank should be granted to minority party candidates and independents. If so, a plethora of candidacies might be the result. Publicity seekers would be tempted to run for Congress every two years as an inexpensive way of broadcasting their ideas.

It seems to us that the remedy must be sought in curtailment of the franking privilege. But here again the problem is not simple. When Congressmen are accused of abusing the frank, their stock reply is that franked mail is only a trickle in comparison to the outflow of free mail from the executive department. This is true. Last year about 20 million pieces of mail bearing the congressional frank were delivered by the Postoffice. What is known as "penalty mail" sent out by the Federal departments amounted to 1,468,000,000 pieces. While much of this was routine informational mail, such as crop reports, Selective Service notices and so forth, it also included a vast amount of printed matter that was politically useful to the party in power. Certainly the free flow of congressional propaganda through the mails cannot be fairly restricted if nothing is done on the executive side. And the task of separating political propaganda from essential information that the people must have from their Government is well nigh impossible.

The Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee once recommended that the law be amended so as to prevent the franking of extracts from the Congressional Record of a purely personal character with the intent of promoting the political interests of the person to whom the material relates. But it does not seem probable that such a measure would be effective. A more hopeful start might be made by forbidding the "lending" of the frank to organizations to spread their propaganda. This is an abuse which can scarcely be defended, and experience in dealing with it might indicate how restrictions can be tightened in other places.

Science Foundation

In science, as well as in administration generally, there often is a tendency to reshuffle the same top experts for important jobs. Because of this it is refreshing to note a wide representation in the 24 scientific, educational and business leaders named by the President to the National Science Foundation. For example, although the list contains such familiar names as James B. Conant, Chester Bernard, Charles E. Wilson, Detlev W. Bronk and Lee A. Dubridge, it also includes Dr. Robert P. Barnes of Howard University and many lesser-known persons from smaller colleges. This is important, because in Government programs involving science, the tendency has been to concentrate on the larger colleges and squeeze out the smaller institutions. It is a pity, however, that Dr. Vannevar Bush, who has contributed so much to the national science, is not among the appointees.

The Science Foundation has a tremendous job, especially in light of the expanded defense program. For the accent in military programs is always on applied science, whereas so-called pure or basic research is the fuel of all later applications. The foundation this year has only a small appropriation with which to establish itself; but authorizations of up to 15 million dollars a year are provided eventually for research grants and fellowship funds. The investment is a sound one, for science is an arm of security, and there is great need for the promotion of a sound national science policy which will foster research in all fields. It is especially good to have an agency which can give voice to some of the problems of scientific manpower. In this connection the Science Foundation can be a welcome check on Selective Service in assuring that an adequate reservoir of young scientific talent is maintained.

Apple Time

The old apple tree is reported to be bending with a weight of fruit in Virginia orchards. The season brings a plentiful supply of memories to that yet large proportion of Americans who had a rural childhood. Many must be the remembrances of waiting, interminably it seemed, for the first ripe apple; of eating deceptively rosy ones too early; of rushing hungrily to orchard or back yard trees after school; of arguing over which was best, Winesaps, Jonathans, Grimes Golden, or even perhaps the little greenish pippins; of hiding away an especially magnificent apple to take to the teacher. Then there was the excitement of grinding sparkling juice in the crude cider mill, without any qualm over sanitation. There was the storing of apples in cellar or basement, the apple butter making in the kitchen, the bandying of neighborhood jests and gossip about how hard the cider had become in some leading churchman's cellar.

No food is more closely tied up with the cultural and emotional background of Americans than the apple. Hence, some fear that the trend to big business in apple raising will rob the apple of its personality, its rugged individualism. What, it is asked, is to become of the favorite old apple tree of song, story and memory now that apples are being raised by the thousands of acres, scientifically sprayed so they will not fall to the ground, picked by assembly line methods, and turned over to canners and cold storage dealers? Will the day come when one sees an apple only in a frozen food package or a can? Will the old apple tree go the way of the old well and the old swimming hole?

We think not. It's a safe bet that America's rising social order, the rapidly increasing "rurbanites" who are getting small acreages on the outskirts of cities, will give the old apple tree a reincarnation.

WHERE THE DARK LEAVES CHANGE WITH THE FROST

This afternoon the flower vendor called (A hoary man, completely flower-enthralled),
With sheaves of late acacia in his cart,
And autumn leaves, bunched carefully apart.
He watched my eyes, and—dull or clever—said,
"Trees are more beautiful alive than dead"—
Then spread the gold cloud-fluff before my hands.
Tonight, branched from an old blue vase it stands,
Pale ghost of April, haunting autumn's hills.
Its fragrance drifting past me only spills
Across my heart a hillside changed to flame,
Where seasons alter in the landscape's frame.

"Roof Of The World"

However one may disagree at times with the conclusion of your carefully written and stimulating editorials, one is regularly impressed by their accurate factual foundations. It was with great amazement, therefore, that I noted two serious errors of fact in one sentence in your discussion of Tibet ("Roof of the World," October 31). You state that "Buddhists number a third of the human race, mainly Indians." Regarding both the number and the nationality of the adherents of Buddhism you are far wide of the mark.

According to R. E. Hume's The World's Living Religions (1941), there are about 137 million Buddhists in the world. Other estimates run as high as 150 million. If we assume a total world population of around two billion, this represents not one third but only about one thirteenth of the human race. Further, although Buddhism began in India, as long ago as the thirteenth century it had practically disappeared from the land of its birth; today only a few Buddhists remain in the border sections. Quite conceivably India would be "impressed by a demonstration of Chinese strength in the land of the lamas," but certainly not because of the number of Buddhists in her population.

Editor's Note: Authority for the questioned statement is Sir Charles Bell, in the introduction to his classic Tibet: Past and Present. Sir Charles, scholar and diplomat, says: "And most of all does it (Tibet) appeal to Buddhist devotees, one third of the human race, many of whom find their holy of holies in some Tibetan shrine." What Sir Charles meant, we should say, is that all the Asian religions, except Mohammedanism, are heavily infiltrated with Buddhism, though you will find Buddhistic influence even in Islamic Java.

As for India, the Hinduist himself finds holy places at the sources of the Indus, Sutlej, Brahmaputra, and other great rivers that rise in Tibet. However, we would be inclined to say that any measurement would be contentious.

Credo For Americans

On October 28 there appeared under the heading, "Credo for Americans," a communication from Lois Wilder of the ECA mission to Portugal at Lisbon. It suggested "a simple statement of belief and faith that we can repeat over and over to the weak links in our armor."

I have as yet read no answer to such a worthy challenge.

As I myself have also been a foreign service employe — in France, in Vienna and in Berlin—I can sympathize with the need of such a credo and, while I may be unequal to the size of the task, nevertheless, I propose the following as a present and fitting declaration for Americans:

"I believe in the goal of a world united in peace by the consent of its peoples.

"I believe in global cooperation as economically, socially and politically sound.

"I believe in the dignity of the individual within world-wide unity; in the protection of his rights, and of those of minorities, regardless of race, language or religion, and in everlasting effort, through national patterns, voluntarily set up and willingly maintained, to create a federal union that will give increasing democratic expression to the needs and aspirations of mankind.

"I believe in the United Nations and its Charter as the means to the attainment of world peace and unity, and in its flag as a symbol of present beginnings and future achievements.

"In all these respects I am an American first, recognizing the evolution of our great Union from the 13 sovereign States, conscious of our newly found strength as protagonist of international cooperation and world peace, and with a desire that, through example and effort of these United States, there may come a time when our own loyalties and those of other nations will unite and animate the human structure of worldhood."

George Bernard Shaw

The eulogies for George Bernard Shaw are likely to sound a little familiar, for we've been hearing them so long. Perhaps the lines written 30 or so years ago by the Chicago poet-columnist Bert Leston Taylor, and published in his book A Penny Whistle, come close to the most that can be said about George Bernard Shaw at the moment. They are entitled Shaw (after reading "Major Barbara"):

Let critics chew your plays, and find
Fit matter for their trade of whacking;
Let pundits analyze your mind,
And say that this or that is lacking.

For critic sass or pundit gas
I do not care a week-old cruller:
I only know that when you pass
This world will be a damsite duller.

What better praise could one want?

No Pardon

I note in your November 9 edition a letter suggesting that President Truman pardon and deport the Puerto Rican would-be assassin, in order to prevent him from becoming a "martyr." It was signed "Virginian."

"Virginian" seems to forget that the assassination attempt, while unsuccessful, resulted in the death of a man, and the wounding of several others. The death itself should normally be interpreted in our courts of law as murder in the first degree, for which the penalty is death. It would not only be unwise for the President to interfere here, because of the circumstances, but it would doubtlessly arouse not only all good Americans, but all good, loyal Puerto Ricans, who are, after all, good and loyal Americans, too.

Dance Recital

Perhaps our fair, voteless city is finally growing up culturally. Our admittedly superior symphony orchestra seems to be getting somewhat better support, and we have two legitimate theaters operating where a year ago we had none.

It was particularly encouraging to read the critical acclaim given Jose Limon and his fine dance group for their performance at Lisner on November 6, although the few vacant seats would hardly have existed in other metropolitan centers. It is to be hoped that the forthcoming dance recital on Tuesday, November 21, at Lisner Auditorium of Ethel Butler and her group, an excellent young dancer of equal stature with Limon, will receive the support it deserves. Incidentally, here is one case where not only the audience will be unsegregated but likewise the performing artists.

Redistricting In Fairfax

Fairfax County citizens, having decided on change and on the executive form of government for that change, now face what may be an even more confused and difficult period of implementing their choices. The fact is that the referendum raised as many questions as it settled. To grasp these questions for the future, and see what the answer might be, it is necessary to note how the voters lined up.

First, as you have pointed out editorially, there never has been any question that the voters who wanted no change at all—or who wanted a special form from the Legislature—would vote "against" change and "for" the executive form. That form, providing milder changes, was the inevitable second choice of those against all change.

It was agreed before the election, then, that the no-change voters—the courthouse supporters—would vote for the executive form on question No. 2. The only question was as to how many courthouse voters there would be. As it happened, there were far more than anybody expected—3534. Of these, 111 did not mark their ballots at all on the second question. That left 3423 to vote for the executive form.

Of the 5210 votes for the executive form, then 3423 were courthouse supporters who admittedly wanted no change, and 1787 were voters who really wanted a change and sincerely wanted the executive form. The manager supporters made up the third group, of 3502 voters.

On question No. 1, the manager group and the executive group teamed against the courthouse for a 3-to-2 vote "for" a change. On question No. 2, the executive group and the courthouse supporters combined for a 3-to-2 vote for the executive form.

There is little doubt what the civic groups who started this thing will do—if they keep on working at all. They will attempt to make the executive form work. That, of course, involves many things that must be done. But first—from the view of these civic groups—it involves redistricting the county on an equal-population basis. Sponsors of the reorganization fight believe that so long as the courthouse can elect three of the six supervisors, simply keeping its control of the three districts that have 17,000—or 17 percent—of the population, there can be no responsive government, under any form.

The real question is: What will the executive group do? A very small group, it nevertheless holds the balance of power. It must be clear from the lineup of voting groups in the referendum that only an alliance of the two groups that really wanted change to an improved form can force an equitable redistricting. The manager supporters, roughly equal in number to the courthouse supporters, cannot win by themselves. And certainly the executive group is too small to do much by itself, whatever the prestige of its leaders.

An alliance of these two groups, moreover, must be extended into the period after redistricting if the county is not to be run by the same group and in the same manner which aroused the demand for change. With equitable representation provided for by redistricting and with really active participation by citizens who want good government, the executive form will work beautifully for the good of all the citizens of the county. For, with these things provided, honest and intelligent persons will be found and elected to office.

The future of the county, then, clearly appears to depend on the willingness of the two groups which wanted change to bury their differences and work together to make the executive form function.

Election Fear In Europe

By Andre Visson

Is It Justified?

THE off-year elections are over. The ballot-dust has settled. But the battle of interpretations which has just begun is likely to go on for some time. And among these interpretations those of Europeans deserve, in the opinion of this writer, special attention.

The traditional American feeling is that United States elections are not the business of other countries—and particularly not of Great Britain. This may have been true in the past. It is less true today. Developments in foreign countries—whether in Asia or in Europe—exert a certain impact on American elections. And American elections are likely to exert an even greater impact on what happens abroad.

Now that this country has become the leader of the free world, we cannot help feeling that elections in all free nations are of direct concern to us. We should therefore not resent it if the people of other free nations feel strongly that our elections are of direct concern to them. What are they thinking of last Tuesday's elections?

Foreign envoys in Washington are extremely guarded in expressing their opinions. They are fearful of giving offense to American feeling. They are especially fearful of giving offense to the new Republican Senators and Congressmen whose vote they will need in order to receive further American economic and military aid. But European delegates to the United Nations feel themselves free to comment. They live in the United States but they work on "international territory." And the European press naturally feels even freer to comment.

IN Great Britain the Laborites are naturally disappointed with the elections which marked a crushing defeat for American labor. But the British Conservatives are not too happy either. Their feeling has perhaps best been summarized in Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express: "The balance of American interest may swing further away from Europe toward the Far East."

The same apprehension is voiced on the continent. Republican attacks having been concentrated on the Administration's Far Eastern policy, the Republicans appear to the worried Europeans as greater friends of Nationalist China than of the European members of the North Atlantic Alliance.

The Italians, who are as worried as other western Europeans, at least find comfort and pride in a Sicilian-born boy having become Mayor of the "greatest Italian city in the world." As a matter of fact, they did not have to wait for the elections to feel this pride. All three candidates for the Mayorality of New York—Impellitteri, Pecora and Corsi—were born in Italy!

But the French are deprived of any such comfort. There were no French-born candidates in the Tuesday elections. And the French press—from the right wing Le Figaro to the left-of-center Combat—is taking a very gloomy view of the American elections. They interpret them as a defeat for the Administration's foreign policy. They expect the resignation of Secretary Acheson. And they wonder, apprehensively, what the Eighty-second Congress may have in store for them.

BUT the most interesting French reaction to the American elections was expressed by Maurice Schumann, the leader of the middle-of-the-road MRP (Christian-Democrats), of which Robert Shumann, the Foreign Minister, is a member. Mr. Maurice Schumann is one of the most intelligent and best-informed friends this country has in France. He has just returned from the United States where he was one of the French delegates at Lake Success. It is his opinion that the Republican success was based on two trends in American public opinion: (1) mistrust and resentment of Europe, due partly to the new burden which European rearmament will place on the American taxpayer; (2) "ferocious anticommunism."

On the other hand, many French and other European papers are not so much interested in Senator Taft's defeat of the pressure groups of organized labor, as in his statement that American expenditures on economic and military aid to Europe should be re-examined.

Now, are all these European worries and fears caused by last Tuesday's elections justified? This writer does not think so.

The returns in many States would seem to indicate the growing intellectual maturity of the American voter. He is getting away from the straight party ticket and is voting for what he thinks to be the better man. This is especially true in New York, Connecticut, Illinois and Oklahoma.

He repudiated those Democrats who followed Administration policy blindly, but returned those like Brian McMahon and Mike Monroney whose ability was proven. In Ohio he rebelled against the pressure of organized labor. As for foreign issues, his vote was motivated not so much by his resentment against Europe as against what is going on in Asia. Finally, Europeans would do well to realize that few Democrats have as good an understanding of Europe's problems as John Foster Dulles and Henry Cabot Lodge,—both Republicans.

Matter of Fact

Two Threats to Taft: Ike and Taft

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT GOES without saying that Senator Robert A. Taft is now about as good a bet for the Republican presidential nomination in 1952 as any man can be almost two years before the event. At one stroke he has demolished the old Republican shibboleth—that "Bob Taft would make a fine President, but he could never get elected"—by winning in Ohio with the greatest majority in that State's history. By the same token, his triumph in Ohio has assured him of all-out support among Republican organizations throughout the whole Midwest and the South.

The plain fact is that unless Taft is most seriously challenged, and soon, from either the East or West coasts, he may well go to the convention assured of nomination on the first ballot.

In the East there is, of course, one man who could challenge Taft very seriously indeed—Dwight D. Eisenhower. What is more, if Eisenhower wanted the nomination, he could be sure today of the unanimous support of two of the largest delegations in the country, those of New York and Pennsylvania.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, who is now assured of unquestioned control of the New York delegation, announced for Eisenhower well before the election. The day after the election, his party chiefs immediately began to beat the drums for the General. Obviously there will be no visible national political future for Dewey if his ancient rival, Taft, becomes the party standard bearer, and, equally obviously, Dewey is convinced that only Eisenhower can now stop Taft.

AS FOR DUFF, he will also control the Pennsylvania delegation without any trouble, now that he has destroyed the ancient Pennsylvania Grundy-Owlett machine. And Duff, who admires Eisenhower intensely, has repeatedly stated in private that he is ready to go the limit for Eisenhower in 1952.

Logically, therefore, Dewey and Duff would now join hands to promote an Eisenhower boom in order to stop Taft. But there are complications. A minor complication is the fact that Duff fought like a tiger to stop Dewey in 1948, even switching to Taft at the last moment at the Philadelphia convention. For this and other reasons, there is no love lost between the two men.

But the real complication is the attitude of Eisenhower himself. For it is entirely likely that Dewey and Duff may find themselves backing a candidate who will flatly and finally refuse to run. It is pretty clear that Eisenhower has been the victim of a certain amount of inner conflict.

He was certainly deeply sincere when he said in effect in 1948 that a professional soldier has no business running for President. But it is also obvious that he has been disturbed and dissatisfied with the trend of events both at home and abroad. His service in a civilian status, as a university president, visibly diminished his scruples about a professional soldier taking part in politics, and there is no real doubt that until quite recently he was thinking very seriously indeed about the Presidency.

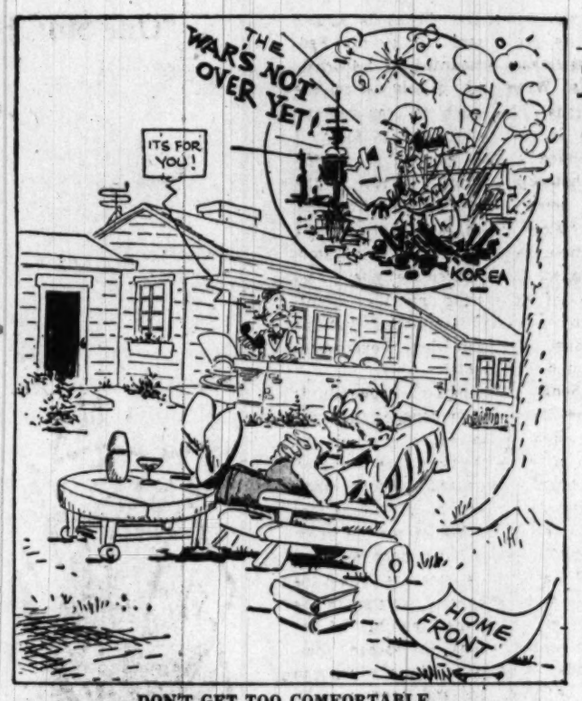
Yet now he has accepted President Truman's offer of command of the Atlantic Pact forces in Europe. Clearly this changes everything. Eisenhower will be back in uniform for the foreseeable future, and in view of his own scruples, it is difficult to see him countenancing a draft-Eisenhower boom while in service.

Moreover, although he was clearly a little uncomfortable in his role as a university president, he will now be doing a supremely important job which he is supremely qualified to do. All this certainly suggests that the Duff-Dewey candidate to beat Taft may be no candidate at all.

AS FOR THE WEST COAST, Gov. Earl Warren, who enjoyed a triumph at the polls at least as great as Taft's, is counted an active candidate. His supporters are already hard at work to organize a solid Warren bloc of 11 States on which to build at the convention. But Warren is detested by the professionals, who suspect him of "radical" sympathies and party irregularity. Moreover, 11 Far Western States simply do not constitute a really serious threat to Taft, unless Taft is at the same time very seriously challenged from the East.

There remains one way Taft could be beaten. He could beat himself. To judge from his post-election statements, he is returning to Washington prepared to battle to the death for the Chicago Tribune's brand of foreign policy.

This could violently alienate the powerful, moderate, internationalist wing of the Republican Party, by demonstrating once and for all that Taft's isolationism is no optical illusion. This wing of the party has never been dominant in Congress, but it has triumphed at every convention since 1936. What is more, events themselves are all too likely to demonstrate the fatal wrongness of a head-in-the-sand foreign policy, long before 1952.



DON'T GET TOO COMFORTABLE
. . . Dowling, in the New York Herald Tribune

The Magazine Rack

By Orval Hopkins

POLTROONERY is a pretty ugly word, any way you look at it, but Fortune uses it unequivocally to describe the antics of a group of bankers on convention in New York recently. The bankers, Fortune says, declined to take sides in the controversy between the Federal Reserve and the Treasury over what agency, and what considerations, should decide the fate of the dollar. They then paid an unusual tribute to Secretary Snyder. "Thus the bankers," Fortune pursues, "not only refused to be counted out but showed a sneaking partiality for the wrong side."

"You will go a long way," reports Fortune in another place, "before finding a class of legitimate businessmen that has made so much money so easily as the automobile dealers of America in recent years." Some dealers earn, with some consistency, as much as $50,000 a month, "and have indeed known a number of months when their net ran to $100,000 or more." Fortune says the average is $40,000 to $50,000 a year.

TOP-DRAWER NAMES and fat Christmas ads make Holiday (due this week) something to see. Among the names are Budd Schulberg, Irving Stone, Ludwig Bemelmans, S. J. Perelman and James A. Michener. Schulberg's contribution is a get-away-from-it-all number about the Florida keys. Stone has done a story with pictures about the University of California, which seems to be bucking for the medal awarded the most-written-about university. Bemelmans has hied back to the Tyrol and written a Christmas story about the area.

And Michener's current south seas report has to do with New Guinea, where everybody drinks 2 gallons of beer a day and says, "Me? Leave New Guinea? Not on your life!" Perelman's share is, of course, the final chapter of his peripatetic "Swiss Family Perelman."

NORMAN THOMAS, the Socialist, suggests in the Reporter that "in New York, Albany and Washington there is a very low standard of moral requirements for public office." Laying about him on all sides, as usual, and sparing no parties, Thomas points out:

That Republicans joined Democrats in paying tribute to Andrew May, who in wartime used his position as chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee to defraud the Government for the benefit of himself and his friends. "He was still in prison when the eulogy was delivered."

That "that old crusader, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey," was adamant in rejecting all suggestions of inquiry into the O'Dwyer administration in New York City.

That "during O'Dwyer's incumbency a carnival of graft and murder took place on the waterfronts."

That Ed Flynn of the Bronx, "noblest manipulator of them all, persuaded a willing Bill O'Dwyer to resign as Mayor on the promise (which Flynn somehow extorted from the President) that he should be appointed Ambassador to Mexico."

And that "so far it has been easy for politicians to win support with little reference to standards of high competence and honor."

GEN. CARL A. SPAATZ in Newsweek refutes the tale that General MacArthur knew nothing about the plan to drop the atomic bomb on Hiroshima. Spaatz says that on August 1, 1945, he flew to Manila and delivered to MacArthur a copy of "the fateful order for the dropping of the atom bomb."

PHILIP WYLIE, apparently never knowing when to leave a good thing alone, has rewritten his "momism" tirade from "Generation of Vipers" for Look and has added the suspicion that "pop" isn't so hot either. "Momism" (the belief that motherhood automatically makes women noble, good, virtuous, wise and suitable to command) would never have become such a force in our way of life, Wylie says, if "pop hadn't defaulted his job. Even the most primitive societies turn over the boys, at the age of 10 or 12, to the men, for instruction in those arts, skills, attitudes and feelings which make a true male."

"At school, too, pop quit," Wylie grumbles. "Women took over teaching . . . and once the boys reached college level, they were trained to be, not what men really are, but what anxious mothers think they would like men to be: cautious, subservient, home-fawning chaps . . . In short, not he-men, but she-men."

Dan Parker of the New York Daily Mirror takes to task Harvey L. (Heinie) Miller, executive secretary of the National Boxing Association and boxing coach at the University of Maryland, in a Look article about the dangers of the prize ring. Parker's thesis is that though men are killed or permanently injured in the ring, the NBA takes few if any steps toward doing something about it.

IN ITS "WHISPERS" department, U. S. News & World Report whispers that "Air Force officers are trying to bring pressure on Carl Vinson, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, to head off an investigation of Air Force support for ground operations in Korea. Air Force, when the showdown came, was not well prepared or trained for one of its two major assignments."

TIME WAS, writes Thomas J. Hamilton in Americas, magazine of the Pan American Union, when "the best way to win a Nobel Peace Prize was to work your way up to foreign minister or secretary of state, then propose some grandiloquent treaty that—theoretically, at least—would promptly usher in a thousand years of peace." But the world wearied of high-sounding treaties, and in recent years the prize has gone to people and organizations who have actively fought for peace—among them Dr. Ralph Johnson Bunche.

"Compared with the unexampled misery a world war produces," Hamilton writes, "the Palestine war was hardly worth noticing. But Dr. Bunche realized that the best hope of preventing a large war was to stop a small one. This he did with a combination of tact, courage and industry that has made the world his debtor."

ESQUIRE, in addition to being jammed with Christmas notes, carries an interesting piece by John Hohenberg called, "Why Have 110 Wives?" A U. N. commission on the status of women wanted to look into the matter of the Fon of Bikom, who was reputed to be supporting 600 wives. Develops that the Fon was a party 100 years old and that the wives were free to leave him at any time—a prerogative none of them exercised. Then the ladies of the household, indignant about the whole thing, strongly suggested that the commission mind its own darn business.

SLICKPAPER from cover to cover is the Marine Corps Gazette, which is out in a 175th anniversary of the Corps edition containing "an accurate, concise and readable history of the Marine Corps."

THE AAA, in American Motorist, explains the fear that the Government will "place the private passenger car in the expendable category," as it did in World War II. Experience has shown, the AAA insists, "that the passenger car is an indispensable part of our economy both in peace and in war."

A BRIGHT, new little "digest" size magazine published in Washington is called Live. It is dedicated to the idea of how to keep alive, though motoring. Among other sprightly items is a piece by the late Robert Benchley about the people who ride in your back seat.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Truman Can Quote It Backwards

By Drew Pearson

THE OTHER DAY, President Truman was matching Biblical quotations with his old friend, Senator John Sparkman of Alabama. Both men had made public proposals on disarmament in which they used the phrase, "beating swords into ploughshares."

"You know, Mr. President," said Sparkman, who is a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations, "When I said I was quoting the Book of Isaiah, I was challenged by a British delegate, who said the phrase came from the Book of Micah."

"Oh, no, Sparky," retorted the President. "That comes from Isaiah, all right."

"Yes," said Sparkman, "but this delegate was right, too. The very same quotation is in Micah, chapter four, verse three."

"All right," countered the President, "but did you know this, Sparky? The exact reverse of that idea is found in still another book of the Bible. In the third chapter of Joel, it says: 'Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears.'"

Then the President added: "That is what we're having to do right now. That passage is prophetic of our times."

A REVOLUTIONARY gun mount that might have saved hundreds of American lives in both World War II and in Korea is still buried under a pile of Army red tape, favoritism and caution.

It is the Lazarus mount, which adapts the methods of duck-shooting to anti-aircraft fire, and which shot rings around standard gun mounts in various Army trials. However, it has been stymied somewhere inside the Army.

In Army tests, the Lazarus mount fired a less-than-6-foot cone of fire at 1000 yards with a .50-caliber machinegun, scoring a hit on simulated planes every 20 rounds. This compared to a hit every 5510 rounds for standard mounts.

As a result, Col. J. K. Boles, former Olympic rifle champ, reported: "During the last two years I have witnessed many demonstrations of .50-caliber machine gun firing, but have never seen any accuracy comparable to that of the Lazarus mount in trained hands. The mount is deadly against strafing planes. I believe a trained shot could get at least 10 hits on any low-flying plane passing over him. I strongly recommend that it be procured for development."

But the services have never followed this recommendation.

The story begins when G. H. Lazarus, jr., of Bowling Green, Ky., who has been handling a shotgun since he was 10, saw a movie of futile British ack-ack fire against Nazi dive-bombers. The bombers, he noticed, were zooming as low as birds he had hit many times with a shotgun or rifle. Lazarus decided that a gunner could hit low-flying planes by firing machine guns from the shoulder to allow accurate and free swing. So, with a home-town machinist, he built a model mount which won praise at its first test in October, 1941, at Fort Knox, Ky.

It was then that Lazarus ran into his first taste of Army politics. The Armor Force Board had devised its own M-66 mount and ordered it into production. It appeared uninterested in the revolutionary Lazarus technique, and in the inventions of a civilian.

The next trial was at the Army gunnery school at Harlingen, Tex, where Colonel Boles and Dr. A. A. Jakkula, Texas A. and M. professor of structural engineering, improved the mount. In a test before the Tank Destroyer Board at Camp Hood, the Lazarus mount scored 22 hits out of 25 shots at a 6-by-6-foot target at 200 yards, compared to eight hits in 25 for the M-66 mount.

After these tests proved the mount's superiority, Lazarus went to Washington and pounded on doors. He finally was sent to Col. Rene Studler, chief of the small arms development branch, which Lazarus angrily accuses of being the main enemy of his mount.

Colonel Studler, when queried, said his objections were difficulty in teaching gunners the new technique, complicated operations, space limitations and a reluctance to invest "millions of dollars" in a new tactic.

Our Political Economy

Population Choking Puerto Rico

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

THE RECENT Natio..alist uprising in Puerto Rico, which exploded into an attempt on President Truman's life, briefly spotlights a Territory which has been our perplexing ward since 1898.

Today Puerto Rico has its own elected Legislature and its first elected Governor, Luis Munoz Marin, leader of the majority Popular Democratic Party. The Nationalists, whose fanatic splashed briefly across the front pages, are few, bitter and unrepresentative of Puerto Rican opinion.

Yet the island's problems are nonetheless pressing. In an ironic way, the central one—from which the others all derive—can be laid at the door of American benevolence.

In the last half-century our passion for public health has lowered the Puerto Rican death rate from 25 to 12 per thousand. The result has been an explosive population increase on an island with limited land and almost no resources.

Puerto Rico has more than 600 persons to the square mile. As Jaime Benitez, Chancellor of the University, has put it: "Population pressure in the United States would begin to compare with that of Puerto Rico if all the people of the world—over 2 billion men, women and children—landed there overnight and, by the same nocturnal magic, all available mineral resources were eliminated, heavy industry disappeared and agriculture became the main source of employment."

THE PER CAPITA income of Puerto Rico is one-fifth of our own. Unemployment, even at peak prosperity, seldom falls below 10 percent of the labor force. A skimpy diet of rice and beans spells general malnutrition.

The Puerto Ricans have found their own villains for this state of affairs. One is the absentee United States sugar corporations which have controlled much of the land and derived much of the profit from the island's chief crop. Another villain is high United States tariffs which the islanders feel force them to pay high American prices instead of buying on the cheaper world market.

In spite of these complaints, most Puerto Ricans shun independence. There are good reasons for this.

While it is true that island consumers pay somewhat higher prices for a few staples, like rice and beans, it is also true that the same United States tariff barriers which keep these costs up are all that support Puerto Rico's high-cost sugar economy. Nor could island industries compete outside the protected United States market.

NO LESS important are the hundreds of millions in Federal aid which have flowed to Puerto Rico: unemployment and disaster relief, farm subsidies, conservation payments, highway funds, military disbursements, veterans' benefits and direct grants to the insular treasury. In 1945-46, Government provided 30 percent of Puerto Rico's net income.

At the same time, Puerto Ricans are exempt from all Federal taxes. The internal revenue taxes collected in the continental United States on Puerto Rican rum are all returned to the insular government.

For these reasons, Munoz Marin's majority Popular Party does not favor independence from the United States. The second largest political group in the island favors outright statehood.

IN THE RACE between population and resources, is there a solution to Puerto Rico's problems?

The island government's Industrial Development Co. has made a vigorous effort to build industries around local materials: cement, glass, clay products, wood-pulp, wallboard and paper products. It has also attracted mainland corporations to the island with the lure of cheap labor and freedom from Federal and local taxes.

In these efforts, its success has been considerable. But its horizons remain limited by certain economic disadvantages, the most important of which is the lack of natural resources.

Puerto Rico is in a kind of economic limbo. Wages are too high for its products to compete in world markets with those of underdeveloped areas. At the same time, productivity is too low for them to compete with the continental United States. It has the worst of both possible worlds.

In the race against population, economic progress has to run fast just to stand still. Each year there are 40,000 to 50,000 more people on an island just 35 miles wide and 100 miles long. Any solution which does not touch the population problem can never be more than a palliative.

Puerto Ricans look wistfully to the United States and see how poor they are. Then they look to the other Caribbean islands and see that their per capita net income is higher than Cuba's, twice as high as that of Jamaica and several times as high as that of Haiti or the Dominican Republic.

This leaves them at once dissatisfied with their present status, yet unwilling to change it for independence—not a happy frame of mind for any people to be in.

Hunt for 'Hidden Diabetics' Is On

By Alton L. Blakeslee

STARTING Monday you can get a free test to detect diabetes, eighth killer disease in the Nation.

The score on diabetes now reads:

One million Americans known to have the disease and under treatment. Control of this disease is better than ever before.

Another one million Americans have diabetes but don't suspect it. Early detection means a far better chance of a long, efficient life.

The free tests are offered in a Nation-wide detection drive in Diabetes Week, November 12-18, by the American Diabetes Association, a nonprofit organization with 1400 members, mostly doctors.

They hope at least five million Americans will take the simple tests to detect excess sugar in the blood or urine. Too much sugar can mean diabetes. If five million take the tests, about 50,000 now unknown diabetics will be discovered, and will benefit from early starting of treatment.

The ABC's of diabetes are simple, and never more hopeful:

The Disease: Your body isn't able to change sugars and starches into energy, or store them for future use as it should. The trouble is due to lack of insulin, a hormone from your pancreas gland.

Symptoms: These include thirst, hunger, frequent urination, getting tired easily, loss of weight, slow-healing infections. In early stages or mild cases, there may be none of these signs. You just don't feel well.

The free tests: The methods will vary over the country. In many areas, physicians will give free tests in their own offices. In other communities, special testing centers will be set up. Mobile testing units will visit factories, schools, and clubs in some areas. In a few places, people will be urged to make their own simple urine tests with inexpensive test kits, available in drug stores.

Treatment: Mainly injections of insulin, and careful attention to the food you eat, so all foodstuffs are completely used by the body.

Insulin constantly has been improved since its first use nearly 30 years ago. A new form just appearing, called NPH insulin, starts to act in two hours. The first insulin began working in an hour, but lasted only about eight hours. The later improved form starts to act in six hours, stays effective up to 36 hours.

WHO GETS DIABETES: Women are more susceptible than men, married women more susceptible than single women. Diabetes can start very early in childhood, or later in adult life. It seems to run strongly in families, as an inherited tendency. It seems to follow certain inheritance laws, which means that it can affect you even though there has been no known diabetes in your family for generations before.

Complications: Diabetes can kill. It also may speed up hardening of arteries, make a person more susceptible to tuberculosis and other infections. The dangers are greatest when diabetes is not completely and continually controlled. Early detection and treatment greatly lessen these dangers.

ABC Denies License to Atlas Club

Board Concludes After-Hours Spot Fails to Comply With Requirements

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday denied the Atlas Club a Class C liquor license to operate as a private organization.

The board concluded that the club, located at 1349 E st. nw., illegally sold liquor to its patrons, had no certificate to occupy the premises, and failed to come within the meaning of the word "club" as defined in the ABC Act.

The Atlas Club is one of 11 after-hours clubs which United States Attorney George Morris Fay attacked last March. Court action was withdrawn against the Atlas Club in May on the stipulation that it apply for a license.

Board Gives Reasons

The board's refusal to grant a license followed a hearing Tuesday. In a finding of fact, released yesterday, board members pointed out:

1. That the Atlas Club failed to file complete membership lists and other complete documents, books and records as requested by the board.

2. That an examination of check stubs showed that on numerous occasions the club made large purchases of alcoholic beverages "and without an explanation of such purchases, it is reasonable to conclude these beverages were sold to the patrons, in violation of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act."

"In fact, over a five-month period, the club made 59 purchases of alcoholic beverages from retail licensees, at a total cost of $2865.91," board members added.

Lacks Occupancy Papers

3. That the applicant does not have a certificate of occupancy or certain toilet facilities as required by ABC regulations.

4. That the board is unable to find that the applicant is a club within the meaning of Section 3 (g)) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act.

Paul F. Pfeifle, a contractor, of 3815 Florence dr., Alexandria, represented the club as it president at Tuesday's hearing. He told the board the club's records were incomplete due to the fault of a former secretary and because the Internal Revenue Bureau has some of the records to determine whether the Club should pay a cabaret tax.

Pfeifle described the Club as a "social, fraternal and charitable" organization, but said it is in poor financial condition.

July Hearing Postponed

The club was relieved of a threatened shutdown by the Government when it applied for the license in May.

An ABC hearing was scheduled for July, but was postponed because Sidney Brown, club president, at the time was in Europe and could not be fingerprinted. Pfeifle said Tuesday that he has been the club's president since August.

Under ABC regulations, holders of a Class C club license must observe the same closing hours as restaurants. Club guests are not allowed to drink standing up or to drink whisky from their own bottles.

Causes of Two Home Blasts Still Mystery

No Gas Leaks Found In Careful Search Of Both Houses

The cause of two explosions, which damage a Northeast home and a Northwest apartment house Friday, remained a mystery yesterday.

Acting Fire Marshal Roy Warfield said a careful examination was made yesterday morning of the gas pipes at both places, but no evidence of leakage was found.

The second story section of one side of the house at 5340 Ames st. ne. was blown out by a blast. Fires were discovered in the kitchen, bathroom and in a front room closet on the second floor.

One person was injured. George Green, 36, a relative of Eva and Arthur Green who rent the second floor of the house, was treated at Gallinger Hospital for first and second degree burns to his arms, face and hands and released.

Warfield said they could not locate him yesterday for questioning. He gave authorities his address as 5911 Eads st. ne. but could not be found there, Warfield said.

The other blast damaged apartments on six floors of the Kenmore Apartments in the 5400 block of Connecticut ave. nw. No one was injured.

Warfield said the investigation will be continued Monday.

Robbery Charge

Man Jailed On Crutch Bloodstains

The blood-stained crutch of an injured touch football player landed him in jail yesterday.

He is Melvin Leroy Wilson, 26, 407 L st. se., who was held for the action of the grand jury under $1000 bond, charged with robbing George Leo Young, 43, 2650 Sheridan rd se., of $200.

According to police, Wilson stopped Young and his wife in the 800 block of New Jersey ave. se., Thursday, knocked him unconscious with a blow of his crutch and took $200 from his wallet. Wilson told police he broke his foot playing touch football.

Arrested Friday, Wilson denied the robbery. But Detective Mark Gray inspected the crutch and found it caked with human hair and blood.

Police are looking for two men reported by Young to have been with Wilson during the robbery.

Adventists Open Week of Prayer For Leadership

During the week ending November 18, meetings will be held each evening at Adventist churches. A special "offering of sacrifice" will be taken at the end of the week to support the church's foreign mission program.

In the first of special messages to be read at each service, Elder J. Lamar McElrich, retired world president of the church, declared that "the world is not at peace, and from a human standpoint there is no prospect that the Nations of the world will be able to reconcile their differences.

"People must turn to God if the world's troubles are to be solved," Elder McElhany said.

County Seeks Federal Aid For Schools

Arlington Board Votes to Continue Construction Plans Despite Bond Vote

Arlington County's school board voted yesterday to seek Federal aid in an effort to keep alive its proposed emergency school construction program.

Plans for a $7,450,000 school building program were thwarted by last week's surprising vote against bond issues needed. But the board agreed to ask the Government to finance a draft of plans for schools it still hopes to build.

The action was taken after Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell, board chairman, pointed out that Federal funds are available as loans to communities planning public works projects. She suggested the loan be negotiated so that Arlington will be ready to go ahead with its school building program "if and when the necessary funds become available."

There was no indication as how the board might eventually obtain the funds voted down in last Tuesday's referendum. Nor was there any estimate as to how much it will cost to prepare plans for the schools and additions the board deems necessary to meet rising enrollment demands.

In its first meeting since the bond issue vote, the board heard a gloomy resume of existing conditions in Arlington schools.

Charles J. Walsh, assistant superintendent of schools, told of five elementary schools already having enrollment in some rooms "in excess of 40 pupils," in contrast to the State's recommendation that the maximum be 30 pupils. William A. Early, superintendent, said the county's budget for teachers already has been overexpended because of an unexpected increase in enrollment this year.

The board also asked Early to prepare a report on current negotiations for school sites which were to have been used in the expansion program. Mrs. Campbell, who called for the report, said the board would want to know "what sites we can hold on to, and where we will get the money to pay for those we might be able to hold."

The board received a request for three more school buses to help carry pupils who already have overloaded the county's transportation facilities. Calvin Vest, in charge of school transportation, reported some of the 19 buses now used by the county carry as many as 65 pupils, although they were designed for a capacity of 45.

Arlington Police Get Their Man, But Redhanded

A burglar alarm set off in an Arlington auto repair shop led yesterday to the redhanded arrest of a burglary suspect in another shop three blocks away.

Rudolph Wilkins, 33, 514 M st. nw., was arrested by Police Pvts. Joseph Kane and Donald Kidwell in the front office of the Hires-Turner Glass Co., 19th and N. Kent st. Police had been attracted to the area by the report of an attempted burglary at the Rosslyn Auto Body Works, 19th and N. Lynn sts. They spotted Wilkins after deciding to "cruise the area" when they found nothing amiss at the bodyworks.

Kane cut his thumb severely when he smashed a window of the glass company office and ordered Wilkins to "come out with his hands up."

Wilkins was jailed on a breaking and entering charge, pending hearing in Arlington County Court Monday at 9 a. m.

Kansas Ave. Underpass Job Faces Delay

Construction Material Reported to Be Late In Reaching District

The Kansas ave. underpass construction contract has been let, but slow delivery of materials will probably prevent a start on the work until spring.

Deputy District Highway Director Samuel R. Harrison yesterday said he understood it will probably require close to six months to get delivery on steel. Once work starts the underpass should be completed in about another six months, he said.

The structure will underpass the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Co., near Chillum pl. ne., and provide a direct means of access from downtown Washington into Chillum Heights. The tracks now wall off from downtown the residential area around Kansas ave. to the north.

It will cost about $250,000 to build the underpass and another $150,000 to reroute temporarily the railroad tracks, Harrison said. A grant from the Federal Government will pay the entire bill.

During construction, trains will be detoured—just like autos during a street repair job—by bowing the tracks about 25 feet south of the underpass site on a temporary trestle.

Work will start Monday on another project—repaving of a mile of Division ave. ne., from East Capitol st. north to Eastern ave., Harrison said. Construction of a Division ave. bridge over Watts Branch started last week.

The $180,000 paving job will widen Division ave. from two to four lanes, he said, providing a "feeder" road to E. Capitol st. and, evenually, to the unbuilt E. Capitol st. Bridge.

Repaving of Division ave. will be completed in about two months, Harrison predicted. But the street won't be open to through traffic until the bridge is finished next spring.

Retired Brigadier General Becomes MA In Government Field

Great opportunities accompany these days of travail, Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of George Washington University, told 715 members of the graduating class last night.

Dr. Marvin, speaking at the fall convocation of the university, advised the graduates to dissipate the "great darkness' of uncertainty by having faith in the task at hand and "zealously working to accomplish it."

A 62-year-old retired brigadier general receiving a masters degree in Government was among those who heard the address.

Brig. Gen. Sumner Waite retired from the Army September 30, 1948, after 37 years' service in many parts of the world, and matriculated at George Washington the next day.

"I wanted to keep my eye on the ball," said Waite. He plans to return to his Camden, S. C., home and look into opportunities for a recent graduate.

Doctors degrees were awarded to seven persons. Receiving Ph.D.s were Leo R. Goldbaum, James T. Hicks, Merriam A. Jones, William E. Poel, and Eugene W. Rice. Doctor of education degrees were conferred upon Ralph F. W. Brimley and Ralph C. Geigle.

Prayers of commemoration were held at the convocation for Mrs. Hattie M. Strong, trustee and benefactor of the university who died last June, and for six faculty members who died during the past year.

They were: Edward E. Richardson, professor emeritus of philosophy; William C. French, professor emeritus of education; Arthur F. Johnson, professor of mechanical engineering; Harold Kelso, professorial lecturer in business administration; Mallory R. Smith, lecturer on law, and Frank Wilbur Schwab, associate in chemistry.

The Rev. Philip Gordon Scott, delivered the invocation and benediction and Dean Elmer L. Kayser, marshal of the university, announced the convocation.

Rent Increase Recommended For 438 Apts.

Tyson Backs Boost For Good Hope Hills Units; Tenants Fight

James G. Tyson, District rent control examiner, yesterday recommended a 3.38 percent increase on 438 apartments at Good Hope Hills where tenants have filed a counter petition for "substantial" rent reductions.

Tyson's actior is final unless appeal for review is made to Robert F. Cogswell, rent control administrator, by November 20. An appeal is regarded as almost certain in view of the pending request for reductions.

With the recommended increase rents at the southeast Washington project would range from $70 for 3½ rooms to $99.50 for 5½ rooms. Rents now run from $67.75 to $96.

The owners, Waverly Taylor, Inc., had requested a 10 percent increase to compensate for the rise in operating costs and taxes since 1948 when they had received an increase of about 10 percent.

A group of tenants has asked for a reduction on the grounds that the management does not perform needed services and that, contrary to practice at other apartment projects in the area, basement unit dwellers at Good Hope Hills pay as much rent as persons living on upper stories.

The hearing on the tenants' petition was cut short and postponed indefinitely 10 days ago when the presiding examiner disqaulified himself after a verbal tangle with a tenant witness.

300-Pound Block of Ice Pins Man to Wall, Hurts Chest, Head

Adolphus Jackson, 43, an employe of the R. W. Claxton Co., seafood wholesalers at 406 12th st. sw., suffered head and chest injuries yesterday when he was pinned against a wall by a 300-pound block of ice.

Jackson, who lives at 1311 Corcoran st. nw., was admitted to Emergency Hospital in undetermined condition.

Police said he was cleaning a chute carrying the ice from a conveyor belt to a storage room when the heavy block of ice slipped from the end of the belt, crashed down the chute and knocked him against the wall.

Benning Rd. Auto Crash Rate Drops

25 to 30 Percent Decline Reported After Trolley Line Conversion to Buses

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Eighteen months ago, Benning rd. ne. had the "most dangerous 12 blocks in the city."

The man who made the statement, Capt. William J. Liverman, head of the Police Accident Investigation Unit, said yesterday that while Benning was still a dangerous roadway, the auto accidents there have been reduced by 25 to 30 percent.

"And these are less serious—fender jobs instead of fatalities," he declared.

The reduction has occurred since the conversion of the Benning-Rosslyn streetcar line to bus service and completion of road improvements.

Liverman's co-worker, Capt. Loraine T. Johnson of the Police Traffic Division, has an even more favorable report. Pedestrian accidents have been sliced in half.

Head-on Collisions Stopped

"Pedestrians board the buses at the curb and don't have to walk out into the busy street."

Head-on collisions have been averted since the erection of center separations over the stretch where streetcars once plied, Captain Johnson added.

"They stay in their own lanes now," he noted.

The conversion on May 1, 1949, was followed by a widening of the roadway and paving of the center strip. Captain Johnson said this, plus removal of the streetcars, has helped speed up traffic.

The switch from streetcars to buses was heartily approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The group's comprehensive plan for Washington calls for progressive elimination of all streetcar lines.

Greater Flexibility Allowed

The commission's planning director, John F. Nolen, jr., said buses permit more flexibility of routing—the vehicles are not forced to follow fixed routes but can provide direct service from one point to another and may skirt congested streets. Streetcars have no choice; they have to follow the tracks and these are usually on the busiest streets and often distant from employment centers, Nolen explained.

Another advantage of buses is the added service provided in rush hours, Nolen said. "Buses can make more runs with a lesser number of vehicles than streetcars," he declared.

The District Public Utilities Commission, which gave the go-ahead on the change-over, has received only favorable reports, James H. Flanagan, chairman, said yesterday.

Some of the Benning rd. merchants who opposed the change when first proposed in 1947 now are satisfied, Flanagan said.

However, the Benning success is no indication that a general elimination of streetcars is in the offing. At the time that the switch was authorized, Flanagan said every proposal for a change-over would be considered on its own merit. This still stands, he said yesterday.

$1 Million Saved

The Capital Transit Co., which operates both the streetcars and the buses, feels the same way.

In the case of Benning, the firm was faced with the choice of spending three million dollars for construction of a streetcar turnaround and maintenance of the underground lines or spending about one million dollars less by switching to buses, according to company testimony before the PUC when the proposal was debated.

That this situation will be raised frequently in the future was clear to transit men who point out that Washington—with its streetcar power lines underground—has "so much overhead underground."

Free Nations Union Hailed by Truman

Free men must maintain their moral leadership, develop their military potential and strengthen their economic institutions if freedom is to survive, President Truman said yesterday.

The President accented "the ability of the free nations of the world to unite in defense of their principles," as exemplified in Korea, in a message accepting the honorary chairmanship of World Brotherhood Week set for February 18-25, 1951, under auspices of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

The message was read by Eric Johnston, general chairman of Brotherhood Week, at a Mayflower luncheon capping a three-day seminar in brotherhood sponsored by NCCJ.

Bigotry Threat Cited

Johnston himself underscored America's need to rid itself of bigotry if it is to sell its cause to the world.

"Look at the map," Johnston, who is president of the Motion Picture Association of America, illustrated his point. "The Communist empire of Soviet Russia has scooped about 800 million people into its sway. The Western world claims the allegiance of another 800 million. That leaves roughly 800 million who could teeter toward the West—or teeter toward the Kremlin.

"They are mostly in Asia. The Asian people happen to be on the dark-complexioned order. Their religions are mostly strange to us. How much trust do you think they put in Americans when we play up the color line and look down our noses at one another's faith?"

Get Brotherhood Medals

Medals of World Brotherhood were presented to four former Brotherhood Week chairmen: Robert P. Patterson, former Secretary of War; Nelson A. Rockefeller, former coordinator of Inter-American Affairs; John L. Sullivan, former Secretary of the Navy, and, posthumously, to John G. Winant, former Ambassador to Great Britain.

Harold Stassen was to receive a medal as the first general chairman of Brotherhood Week but could not be present.

Sullivan, in his acceptance speech, declared that the differences between communism and democracy cannot be bridged.

"More and more evident it becomes," he asserted, "that the current separation of mankind into differing camps is essentially a moral cleavage involving two irreconcilable concepts of the human being."

Truman Stresses More Unity

Patterson urged the free nations to "do everything in our power to dispel suspicions" of other nations, along with keeping militarily strong.

Rockefeller, who is chairman of the public advisory committee for the Point Four program of economic help to underdeveloped areas, declared that "one expression of brotherhood is concern for the economic well-being of our fellow man."

The President, in his message, emphasized the necessity of moral unity.

"The survival of freedom in our world," declared the Chief Executive, "depends on the ability of free men to unite in a common program in support of the democratic institutions that nourish and sustain freedom.

"This common program requires the simultaneous development of our military potential and the strengthening of our economic institutions. To direct these efforts, however, on behalf of freedom we must maintain the positions of moral leadership which binds us in a common purpose."

Sodium Arsenic

Gin Rummy Game Ends In Hospital

A quiet game of gin rummy ended in Providence Hospital last week, when the gentlemen card players mistook sodium arsenic for gin, the Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reported yesterday.

In another unusual accident, a piece of Sunday roast beef became lodged in a man's throat and was removed in a hospital. During the week 97 home accidents were reported, bringing the 1950 total to 5192.

Accidental deaths to date totaled 168, the service reported, 26 less than at the corresponding date last year.

Freedmen's Gets $20,000 For Research

Freedmen's Hospital here will receive a $20,000 award from a Masonic organization to further tuberculosis research, it was announced last night.

Charles E. Burbidge, superintendent of the Federal hospital for Negroes, said the institution was selected for the award of the Ancient Egyptian Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of North and South America and Its Jurisdictions, Inc.

The sum will be presented by Dr. Raymond E. Jackson, of Buffalo, N. Y., Imperial Potentate of the order, in a public ceremony at 3 p. m., next Sunday on the east lawn of the Tuberculosis Annex Building. Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing is scheduled to accept the award for the hospital.

Preceding the presentation, a half-hour concert by the 679th Air Force Band from Andrews Field Air Force Base is scheduled under the direction of Chief Warrant Officer Frank Reed. Musical selections will be given by the Freedmen's student nurses choir.

Government leaders and heads of civic, fraternal, religious, professional, labor and veterans organizations have been invited as honor guests.

Santa Claus, Arriving by Plane, Greeted With Appropriate Acclaim by Younger Set

SANTA GREETS SALLY JOANNE SMALL, 6, OF 210 RHODE ISLAND AVE. NE.

Bringing North Pole weather along with him, Woodward & Lothrop's Santa Claus arrived at National Airport yesterday (43 days ahead of Christmas) to the delight of young and old fans.

His white beard was whipped about by a brisk wind that swept across the field and almost knocked his red velvet cap off.

"Anyone see the snow this morning?" he roared to the wide-eyed youngsters hanging over the observation balcony and some on the field. A gang of little hands shot up—those who had seen the snow flurries that fell from 6:55 a. m. to 7:38 a. m. yesterday.

Santa was officially welcomed by Andrew Parker, president of Woodward & Lothrop, where this particular Mr. Claus will make his headquarters.

Then he and his helpers paraded through Gate 5 eagerly tagged by the younger set, leaving a trail of red balloons on barber-pole sticks, toy airplanes and books.

Out front his royal float awaited. Santa, sitting midst snowy pine trees on a red sleigh, was motored in record time into town.

Lines of cars followed fore-and-aft with button noses pressed against the window panes. The modern-day Santa arriving by plane, was a new kind of thrill for them.

Woman Cab Driver Varies Daily Routine By Singing in Night Club, Composing Music

The Washington Post

NIGHTCLUB SINGER JAN DU MOND CLEANS THE WINDSHIELD OF HER TAXICAB

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

The cab driver was described as follows: Black eyes, black hair. 5 feet 3, 108 pounds, wearing jeans, blouse and button-front sleeveless sweater.

The name that goes with this is Jan Du Mond, who must by all odds be the most fetching cabbie in Washington and for all we know in the United States.

Now Miss Du Mond would not have to be anything else than what she appears to be—a very attractive girl driving a cab—to be something of a story.

Clincher to this is that she's a night-club singer, pianist and composer as well.

Being a night-club singer, in fact, is why Jan started being a cabbie:

"My little coupe broke down. I couldn't afford a car. Becoming a taxi driver provided me with transportation at night to get to my engagement—the company lets me take the car home."

Also, night club singing and taxi-driving are perfect companion professions, Jan's found.

"After so many nights in smoke-filled rooms, it's really wonderful to have fresh air—of course there are a lot of other fresh things that go with it."

To wit, those startled lugs who get in her cab at Dupont Circle and by the time they get off at 14th and F are asking: "May I have your phone number?"

"Too busy," Jan tells them. And it's a fact. "Have you ever driven a taxicab and sung in a night club, too?"

Jan sings everything from a bop arrangement of "Lullaby in Rhythm," beelie-bo, beelie-by, to "April in Paris," soft to hear.

But really taxi-driving, night-club-singing and such are but the economic means to her real love—composing.

"I've done four concertos, a symphony, about a hundred ballads—everything from romantic to jump numbers, a lot of light piano works, some things for piano and violin and for organ. I've written a lot of blues numbers—like 'Knockabout Blues'—but really what I want to compose is serious music . . .

"But did you ever hear of a serious composer who made money at my age from composing? Nope, there are no gimmicks to why I drive a cab—it isn't for the novelty of it. I have to make a living. Night club engagements don't run forever—I have them off and on. Cab-driving and singing in a nightclub—they go together beautifully."

Fort Wayne Mayor, 5 Others Indicted

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Fort Wayne's mayor, the chief of police, and four other men faced 52 indictments today accusing them of bribery, conspiracy and perjury.

Mayor Henry E. Branning, jr., City Purchasing Agent Harold F. Battenberg, and City Council Charles H. Boyer and A. Eugene Martin, president of the Martin Coal and Supply Co., were accused of conspiracy to commit grand larceny in the sale of coal and other supplies to municipal utilities.

Chief Lester H. Eisenhut and Police Capt. Gregor Klug were indicted for perjury for denying to the grand jury they visited Martin's office.

In addition to the conspiracy charges against Boyer, he was accused of accepting $7540 in bribes from Martin, and Martin was accused of bribery.

Branning and Martin also were accused of conspiring to obtain the signatures of members of the Fort Wayne board of works on purchase orders by false representation.

All were arrested and released in bond.

The grand jury's report to Circuit Judge William H. Schannen, after a seven-week investigation, said suppliers of the city's utilities made a profit of $352,897 between 1948 and September, 1950.

Branning, a Democrat, took office January 1, 1948. He was 1948-49 president of the Indiana Municipal League.

Senators Told
Comics Held No Factor in Delinquency

By the United Press

Lurid crime comic books have little or no effect on juvenile delinquency, a Nation-wide survey of public officials and child counselors revealed yesterday.

Instead, the survey, released by the Senate's Special Crime Investigating Committee, showed juvenile delinquency is largely attributable to lack of love in the home, economic insecurity, parental neglect and family bickering.

The survey quizzed 70 probation officers, welfare experts, psychiatrists and prison officials. The committee asked if the experts believe comic books are bad—a waste of time if nothing worse.

Some replied they should be censored or banned. Others said they contribute to delinquency. But most indicated sensational comics have little influence on delinquency and act—if at all—only as a contributing factor that may be dangerous for "unstable" children made "vulnerable" by other factors.

Some experts said comic books are beneficial to youth — by pounding home the maxim that "Crime Does Not Pay" and by providing a release for the aggressive drive of some children.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said "lurid and macabre" comics that glorify the criminal and ridicule law and order "may influence the susceptible boy or girl who already possesses definite anti-social tendencies," but he doubted that "an appreciable decrease in delinquency would result if crime comic books of all types were not readily available to children."

Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the Federal Security Agency's Children's Bureau, said more compelling factors in the increase of youthful wrongdoing stemmed from economic insecurity, parental neglect, family discord, and lack of love, spiritual guidance, and proper discipline.

Several comic book publishers maintained juvenile delinquency had been leveling off for five years at the very time their sales increased.

Monroe Froehlich of the Marvel Comic group suggested some officials may have made the comics a scapegoat to obscure their own failures as law-enforcement agents. Some publishers said their books comply with ethical codes drafted by child guidance experts. They asserted the Bible story of Cain and Abel and the fairy tale of Jack-the-Giant Killer are more horrible than the worst of the comics.

A. H. Conner, Federal Bureau of Prisons, said in many instances "crime comics have furnished a juvenile with a blueprint for delinquent or criminal behavior," but the extent to which they contribute to delinquency is extremely difficult to evaluate."

Prisoner Flees Jail Unseen

A prisoner in the Luray (Va.) jail, whose absence was first noticed yesterday morning when his breakfast tray was found untouched, was recaptured a few hours after escaping.

Back in his prison cell is Obie Meadows, 26, of Jolletts, Va., who is scheduled for trial November 27 in Luray on a housebreaking charge.

One of nine prisoners in the jail, he broke the lock on his cell door sometime Friday night or early yesterday and walked out undetected, police concluded. The other prisoners insisted to police they did not hear or see him leave.

Meadows' escape was first noticed about 9 a. m. by Deputy Sheriff David Campbell, when he collected the prisoners' breakfast trays and found the food on one tray had not been touched. He had not noticed that Meadows was missing when he delivered the trays earlier, he said.

Campbell notified Sheriff Abram Brubaker, who started an immediate search for Meadows with Deputy Sheriff A. Lee Huffman. They found him shortly after 1 p. m. in an Elkton (Va.) taxicab on a sideroad about 28 miles south of Luray. He was headed toward Jolletts, the sheriff said.

Sheriff Brubaker said he was intoxicated when they found him and could not be questioned.

Poor, Ex-Wife Of Millionaire, Dies a Suicide

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—The destitute former wife of a millionaire meat packer was found dead today in her auto—a suicide—as the car radio blared "I'm the Lonesomest Girl in Town."

Mrs. Iva Gilbertson Foster, 59, former wife of John Morrell Foster of the Sioux Falls (S. Dak.) Morrell packing family, was found slumped over the wheel of the car. The motor was running and police said a hose led into the car from the exhaust pipe. Police listed it a suicide.

Max Damon, her attorney, said Mrs. Foster had told him she was broke.

She was divorced in 1933 from Foster and a sensational custody fight over their only child, Whitney, now 23, followed.

She received a property settlemnt of $330,000 from Foster but Doman said most went for court battles.

The action was climaxed in a dramatic legal move in 1937 when the father's attorneys took the boy out of his mother's Beverly Hills mansion and returned him to South Dakota.

The move took the child out of jurisdiction of the California courts. But subsequently Superior Court here awarded the father custody of the boy. The California Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court upheld the Superior Court's finding.

Wife, 24, Found Raped, Slain In Locked Car Near Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—A 24-year-old housewife was found raped and murdered today in her husband's car on a lonely country road.

Police searched for a mysterious caller who telephoned them: "If you will go to Bodi rd. in Wilkens Township, you will find the body of a murdered woman in her car."

The woman, Mrs. Helen Pugliano, was found lying in the seat of the car. Assistant District Attorney Henry Strauss said Mrs. Pugliano had been raped before she was shot to death at point-blank range.

Her clothing had been torn from her body and her shoes were outside the automobile. The car doors were locked from the outside.

Strauss said it was possible the man who called police was the murderer. He said nobody but the murderer could have locked the car doors and that it would have been difficult for a passerby to tell from outside the car whether Mrs. Pugliano had been murdered.

The woman's husband, James, was held for questioning. Police said he was found at work shortly after his wife's body was discovered. Pugliano, 27, of Turtle Creek, Pa., denied any knowledge of the crime.

Husband Tells of Trying To Hire Man to Kill Wife

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—A 59-year-old candy store owner, who wanted to keep his wife from learning he lost $3000, today confessed he tried to hire Clifford Wells to kill her for $40 down and $160 afterwards.

Valentin said he decided to have his wife, 45, killed, rather than reveal he lost the money on a loan to a couple who "skipped town." Police were investigating his story of the loan.

Wells said he agreed to the plan so he could tell police. He demanded $75 down, but settled for $40.

Mrs. Valentin said she would "stick by" her husband because he was "a very sick man who didn't know what he was doing."

CBS Hits RCA on TV Color Delay, Sees Injury

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 (AP).—The Columbia Broadcasting System said in an affidavit today that any further dely in the start of regular color television broadcasting would result in "irreparable injury" to the public.

CBS served the affidavit on the rival Radio Corporation of America and will file it in Federal Court in Chicago on Monday.

The affidavit was in opposition to an RCA motion filed in the Chicago court recently, seeking a temporary injunction against the Federal Communications Commission's order of October 11.

This order authorized CBS color television as standard for the industry and approved the start of commercial color broadcasting on November 20.

Arguments on the RCA motion are scheduled to begin in Chicago on Tuesday.

CBS said suspension of the FCC order would injure the public by costing it money and by delaying the manufacture of color receiving sets.

It said the FCC sought to avoid such injury "by making its decision when it did, rather than delay it for some time as requested by RCA and other manufacturers."

The CBS affidavit said an early start on television color broadcasting would injure RCA only in its "pride and publicity."

It said any injury RCA may have suffered to its sale of black-and-white set sales was "self-inflicted" and due to "RCA's adamant refusal, despite ample encouragement and opportunity, to produce equipment which would fully protect its sets from obsolescence and consequent buyer hesitation."

Free Treatment Set For Two Diabetics

That'll Buy A Lot of Bones

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

PLUSH POOCH—Tootsie gets a good look at a handful of U. S. dollars, the kind her late master left her in his will. Morris N. Jacoby, of Los Angeles, retired department store executive who died last month, named Tootsie sole beneficiary of his $2643.28 estate. A nephew is contesting the will

The District's first child and adult whose previously unsuspected diabetes is uncovered here this week will be treated free of physician's charge for life.

The novel offer was announced last night by doctor-officers of the Diabetes Association of the District of Columbia to spur participation in the free detection drive.

The extent of the offer is apparent in statistics, which show that diabetics live longer, on the average, than non-diabetics, largely because they take better care of themselves.

Last night's offer was made over the names of Drs. Maurice Protas, Samuel Benjamin, Louis K. Alpert and E. Clarence Rice, all officials of the local division of the American Diabetes Association.

Restriction Explained

They stipulated that the two to be selected must be "true" detection cases, persons who had no previous knowledge of having the disease, nor having been treated for it previous to its discovery through this week's campaign.

The free treatment for life offer, it was explained, covers only the physician's charges for treating the disease, itself, and not other ailments and infirmities.

Because of the varied time factors that enter the picture between discovery of excessive sugar in urinalysis and completion of diagnosis, the doctors stressed that final decision in the selection rests with their committee.

To their knowledge, they said, no similar offer has ever before been made.

Drugstores to Aid

They also released the list of approximately 50 drugstore members of the D. C. Pharmaceutical Association who have agreed to serve as specimen collection centers during Diabetes Detection Week, today through Saturday. All other drugstores not serving as collection centers have been supplied the addresses of those which will, as a guide to their patrons to the nearest collection center.

Diabetes Detection Week will also be observed in Alexandria and Arlington County, where all drugstores will accept urine speciments for analysis during the week.

The drive in nearby Virginia is being sponsored by the Arlington County and Alexandria Medical Societies and the Potomac Pharmaceutical Association.

There is no charge to the person wishing to submit urine specimens for analysis during the drive. The specimens, in clean, two to four ounce bottles, tagged with the person's name, age, address and weight, will be accepted by the designated stores up till 10 a. m. each day this week.

At that hour, they will be delivered to a testing laboratory set up by the diabetes association. Results of positive findings will be returned directly to the person, and all names will be confidential, drive officials said.

The local detection program is geared to test more than 100,000 participants. Some 6000 persons in this city may unknowingly have the disease, and the purpose of the drive is to find them for early and better control of the condition.

Church Health League Work Wins Trophy

Public health improvement work of the Metropolitan Baptist Church Health League here has won national recognition, it was learned yesterday.

The League and its workers were awarded the All-America Trophy in the National Health Week contest sponsored annually by the Federal Security Agency since 1928.

It was selected largely on the basis of a league activities report compiled by Dr. E. Otho Peters of 1849 9th st. nw., league president since 1934.

Some of the chief accomplishments of the 20-year-old church organization, besides its achievements last April during the clean-up, paint-up, fix-up campaign of National Health Week, include the training of more than 2000 students in home nursing, child care, nutrition and first aid, and the operation of a Loan Closet for the community's sick and needy.

The Loan Closet, begun by Dr. Peters in 1940, contains such items as wheelchairs, blankets, bed clothes, towels, rubber sheets, sickroom trays, hot-water bottles, ice caps, foot tubs, bed pans and even mattresses and collapsible beds.

Besides winning the trophy, a bronze plaque, the league received certificates of cooperation to present to 30 churches, charitable organizations, radio stations and civic associations that aided it in its program.

Children's Books On Exhibit at Public Library

Original drawings and inscribed copies of children's books from the collection of Dr. Irvin Kerlan of 1919 19th st. nw., have been placed on exhibit at the Public Library, 8th and K sts. nw., and will remain until November 30.

The exhibition is part of the library's observance of Children's Book Week, starting today.

Material from the Kerlan collection also will be shown in the children's rooms of the Georgetown, Northeast, Petworth and Southwest branches of the Public Library.

Bethesda Library Closes For Week of Nov. 20

How Near Are We To Peace?

If Peace is the goal of men of good will, why don't we have Peace? Can it be that the world does not yet understand the true nature of Peace?

Peace is not something to be won on a battlefield or bargained for over a conference table. Peace cannot be wrested from the earth, or wrung from a people. It cannot be bought or traded. For Peace is what lies in the minds and hearts and souls of the ordinary individuals who make up the world.

The fact that the multitudes of the earth speak a thousand different tongues does not deprive us of a common meeting ground. For Peace has a universal language, understood by all men. That language is music.

Music, good Music, the language of Peace, is abundantly available today. In the past decade, greater strides have been made in the creation, transmission, recording and reproduction of good Music than in all the ages that have gone before. The family of the most modest means may now enjoy, at the flick of a switch, Music of such grandeur and inspiration as was denied to kings a short century ago. And so the means of Peace, at least, are everywhere at hand.

But before we can achieve world-wide Peace, we must first find it within ourselves. An hour of listening to good Music each evening can do much to help us in our individual searchings. Good Music soothes the turbulent spirit. It inspires hope. It breeds contentment. It generates good will.

Without these in the souls of men, Peace is impossible. But with them, Peace becomes a blessed, miraculous reality!

Lippmann Honored By Sigma Delta Chi

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Nov. 11 (AP).—Benjamin M. McKelway, editor of the Washington Star; Howard Blakeslee, Associated Press science editor, and Walter Lippmann of the Washington Post, and New York Herald Tribune, tonight were named for the annual fellow awards by Sigma Delta Chi, national journalism fraternity.

The three journalists received unanimous approval by delegates attending the thirty-first annual convention of the fraternity.

John M. McClelland, jr., editor of the Longview, Wash., Daily News, was elected president to succeed Carl R. Kesler, editorial writer of the Chicago Daily News.

Grove Patterson, editor of the Toledo, Ohio, Blade, was re-elected honorary president. Patterson was contested for the position by Roy Howard, chairman of the board of Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The vote was 31 to 26.

Charles C. Clayton, editorial writer for the St. Louis, Mo., Globe Democrat, was elected vice president in charge of professional chapter affairs and Lee Hills, managing editor of the Miami Herald, vice president in charge of undergraduate chapter affairs.

Alden C. Waite, president of the Southern California Association of Newspapers, was reelected treasurer and Robert U. Brown, editor of Editor & Publisher, was re-elected secretary.

The fellow awards are initiated each year by undergraduate members to the fraternity. Candidates are submitted by a committee and voted upon by delegates attending the national convention.

Earlier Louis M. Lyons, curator of the Nieman Foundation at Harvard University, said tthe principal responsibility of the press is to provide readers with the facts, without distorting or slanting them. He declared one aim of education should be to teach the student how to read newspapers.

For 1949
D. C. Vital Statistics Released

The District Health Department yesterday released corrected vital statistics tables for the full calendar year of 1949. They showed only minor percentage changes from the 11 months actual and one month estimated figures published last December.

However, department officials said the figures are accurate only for giving comparison with birth and death rates for former years. In 1949 as in previous post-war years the rates were based on population estimates about 70,000 higher than actual.

The total death rate, computed from 8832 deaths, remained unchanged at 10.1 per thousand population as compared with the record low of 9.9 in 1948. Also unchanged was the record low maternal death rate figure of .5 per 1000 live births. The corrected infant mortality rate was 26.4 deaths per 1000 live births, and the number of births, 27,382.

There were some slight changes in figures, but none in relative standings, of the 10 leading causes of death. There follows a listing of the 10 leading killers (corrected to 12 months) with the death rate figured per 1000 population and the 1948 figures listed opposite:

Causes	1949	1948
1. Heart disease	3.06	2.87
2. Cancer	1.60	1.50
3. Nephritis	.76	.82
4. Intercranial lesions of vascular origin (Circulatory ailments)	.69	.67
5. Tuberculosis	.51	.54
6. Accidents (Except traffic)	.49	.47
7. Premature birth	.325	.31
8. Pneumonia	.29	.34
9. Diabetes	.29	.27
10. Cirrhosis	.185	.18

Using the same population estimate and not correcting for residence, the poliomyelitis death rate for 1949 was .01 per 1000. Actually, however, only two District residents died here of polio in 1949. This adds up to one resident polio death to about 170 resident tuberculosis deaths.

Pneumonia Deaths Cut By New Drugs

Effect of the newer drugs against the infectious diseases is shown graphically in the disease death rate charts maintained by life insurance companies.

Statistics recently released by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. show, for example, that for every person who dies of pneumonia now there were three to four deaths from the same disease as recently as 15 years ago.

The statistics on industrial policy holders of the company show that the average annual death rate for pneumonia has fallen progressively from about 68 for each 100,00 insured in 1935-37 to 33 for 1940-42, to 20 for 1947-49.

The declines follow closely the advent of the sulfa drugs, penicillin, and aureomycin. More recently terramycin appears likely to bring further reductions in pneumonia's toll, said Dr. Louis I. Dublin, chief statistician for the insurance company.

Forest Fire Misses Movie Stars' Homes

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—The last of a series of wind-whipped Southern California fires was almost under control today, but special emergency crews stood by as a record spell of low humidity created a dangerous fire hazard.

Movie stars' homes around Chatsworth, at the northwestern end of the San Fernando Valley, were threatened by a leap-frogging 1500-acre blaze early today before Los Angeles and Ventura County crews brought it under control. Flames moved so swiftly through an oil field that the petroleum installations were not even damaged although surrounding grass was blackened.

Commander McCool (right) presents medal to Sergt. Grimm

Sergt. Henry F. Grimm, veteran Alexandria policeman, was honored yesterday as the city's most outstanding citizen of the past 12 months.

In Armistice Day exercises at the Veterans Memorial in Alexandria Union Station Plaza, Sergeant Grimm was awarded the Veterans of Foreign Wars Citizenship Medal, presented annually by the Russell Mitchell VFW post to the Alexandria citizen who has contributed the "most outstanding community service" in the preceding year.

The award was presented by Post Commander Charles P. McCool in the presence of State and local officers of the VFW, ity officials and police department representatives.

Sergeant Grimm, 47, was selected for the award for his contribution to the Alexandria police boys' camp in the last year and for his work with the city's schoolboy patrols for a decade.

The boys' camp has been named for Grimm's son, Pvt. Herbert F. Grimm, a Marine who was killed at Iwo Jima in World War II.

Joining McCool in paying tribute to Grimm in the brief ceremony were Armistead L. Boothe, Alexandria delegate to the Virginia General Assembly; Maj. Edgar Sims, chief of the police department, and Albert A. Smoot, vice mayor of Alexandria.

St. Patrick's Church Planning Pan-American Mass on Nov. 23

The traditional Pan-American Mass will be held Thanksgiving Day, November 23, at 10 a. m. at St. Patrick's Church, 10th and G sts. nw., the Very Rev. Monsignor James E. Cowhig, Administrator of St. Patrick's Church, announced yesterday.

One of the best-known religious services in the Nation, the special Mass to ask God's blessing on Central, South and North America, has been held every Thanksgiving Day at St. Patrick's Church since 1909.

It was esablished by John Barrett, Director General of the Pan American Union for many years, and the Rev. William T. Russell, then pastor of St. Patrick's Church, the oldest parish in Washington.

James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, and Diomede Cardinal Falconio, Papal Delegate to the United States, presided at the first mass which was also attended by President William Howard Taft.

Since then many notables, both governmental and ecclesiastical, have attended the celebration annually.

Guests of honor at this year's Pan-American Mass will include the ambassadors of all Latin American countries here and the representatives of the same countries in the United Nations.

Helena Rubinstein's new shampoos make your hair dance with color!

Puts dark new depths into your hair! 1.25

Here is the most exciting hair news since bobbed hair! Helena Rubinstein, with a stroke of sheer genius, has invented a shampoo which not only washes your hair, but intensifies its color!

You will get the thrill of your life, the first time you use one of these revolutionary new shampoos. There are three different types to choose from:

1. For BLONDE, RED or LIGHT-BROWN HAIR, Helena Rubinstein has formulated "Blonde Tone" Shampoo. Washes sunny glints into your hair and leaves it shining. "Blonde Tone" is more than a shampoo—it is a transformation! 1.25

2. For DARK HAIR, Helena Rubinstein has created "Brunette Tone" Shampoo. Puts dark new depths into your hair, and leaves it smooth, resilient, with just the right amount of natural oils to make your coiffure tidy after washing. 1.25

3. For DRY SCALPS, Helena Rubinstein has invented Silk-Sheen Cream Shampoo—a cream-shampoo and rinse combined. It is rich-lathering, even in the hardest water, and banishes the soapy film which old-fashioned shampoos left behind. . . . 1.00

Believe it or not, Helena Rubinstein's new shampoos wash so clean that you can literally hear your hair sing when you brush it!

They contain new ingredients which remove loose dandruff from your hair and scalp, and leave hair silky and manageable.

New way to tint your hair

For girls who not only want to improve the natural shade of their hair, but also want to tint it, Helena Rubinstein has created fourteen Color-Tint Rinses which you can wash in and out at will!

For blonde hair there is Corn Silk and Palomino. For red as well as blonde hair—the devastating new Red Hellion, Blonde Venus, Ginger. For brown and brunette hair—Dark Amber, Copper Leaf, Tawny Brown, the blackest Black. For gray and white hair—Blue Smoke, Gray Pearl, the exotic new Blue Vixen.

Buy yourself a bottle of Helena Rubinstein's new shampoo and a box of Color Tint Rinses, and hurry home to make-up your hair as glamorously as you make-up your face. Try it tonight! Color-Tint Rinses, 8 capsules in a box 1.00 plus tax.

FDR: His Personal Papers—From 1928 to 1945

THE WASHINGTON POST today begins publication of 31 daily instalments from the third and fourth volumes of "FDR: His Personal Letters," edited by Elliott Roosevelt, to be published later this month by Duell, Sloan & Pearce at $10.

The letters in these final volumes cover the zenith of Roosevelt's political career, from the State House in Albany, to the White House in Washington, to his death at the "Little White House" in Warm Springs.

The massive two-volume set is necessarily abridged for newspaper serialization, but the letters selected will appear as they were written. The letters chosen cover the ups and downs of Roosevelt's friendships with Al Smith, Hugh Johnson, Henry Wallace, Harold Ickes. They cover the war years, of course, and Roosevelt's views on the issues and personalities of that period. But they begin appropriately with FDR, at Warm Springs, instructing Louis Howe, his secretary, close friend and political adviser, how to answer all those who had congratulated him on his unexpected victory in the New York gubernatorial election of 1928.

FDR to Louis M. Howe in New York (telegram).

WARM SPRINGS,
NOV. 12, 1928

Change letter to read as follows: Quote, I greatly appreciate your kindness in writing me and I shall try hard to deserve your confidence during my term as Governor, period. The defeat of Governor Smith was of course a deep disappointment but I have no patience with those who deduce from it that the Democratic Party is in any danger of extinction, period. Of the additional votes cast in the election the Democratic nominees apparently received many more than half, and the casting of fifteen million votes for our ticket shows that our party has gained tremendous strength since 1920 and 1924. Paragraph, I am of course convinced that had we kept our national organization going between elections we should have done better and I hope that steps will be taken to have this carried out during the next three years, period. This is no time to discuss candidates but it is time for putting into effect a permanent working organization, period. I hope you will write me your views. End of quote. The above seems all that is advisable to use at this time, period. Stationery not yet received; please renew order.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

FDR to Alfred E. Smith in Biloxi, Miss.

WARM SPRINGS,
NOV. 17, 1928

My dear Al:

I fully appreciate your longing for a quiet two weeks and a complete absence from crowds and worshipers. Judging by the papers, however, they are clamoring to see you just as much in the South as at home.

If you are able to stop off here on your way North you will, of course, be most welcome and I will give you a perfectly quiet time if you prefer it,—not even a barbecue.

I, too, am trying to avoid people, but it is somewhat difficult as most of the State of Georgia is trying to call on me. However, I am gradually digging into an enormous pile of telegrams and letters.

Write me what you think in regard to the Transit Commission. The only suggestions that have come to me are Bob Moses, R. V. Ingersoll and Milo R. Maltbie (said to be an independent Democrat and suggested by Ingersoll).

Give my love to Bill Kenney, Jim Riordan and Pat Harrison. I envy you the golf, but I have the swimming.

As ever, yours,

Smith and Roosevelt had been very close politically, their association going back to 1910 when they both served in the State Legislature. FDR was one of the Smith managers at the 1924 Democratic Convention and placed him in nomination there, as he did again at Houston in 1928. FDR had run for Governor in 1928 against his own and Howe's better judgment only because Smith and his friends insisted FDR had to run in order to carry New York State.

None of the people suggested here for the Transit Commission received the appointment.. It went to William G. Fullen, former counsel to the New York Board of Transportation, and was regarded as a victory for the Walker administration, with which Smith did not get along too well.

The next letter selected was written more than a year later.

FDR to James C. Bonbright at Columbia University.

ALBANY,
MARCH 11, 1930

My dear Bonbright:

I am mighty glad to see that correspondence between Felix and you and Walter Lippmann. Of course, I never have been able to understand the editorial policy of the New York World. For instance, it was the World which literally drove Al Smith into sending that fool telegram after the Houston convention telling how wet he was. Al had every wet vote in the country but he needed a good many millions of the middle of the road votes to elect him President. A very wise elder statesman was right when he told me that the World did more harm to Al Smith's candidacy than all the Republican newspapers in the United States put together.

By the same token the World comes out one week with the most radical kind of editorial about utilities and follows it the next week with a recommendation for a compromise which is little short of a complete surrender of principle.

A Foreword

IN THESE volumes, a great effort has been made to show the working relationship between my husband and friends and officials who worked closely with him.

From my point of view, the value of these volumes of letters has been to show the preparation and development which equipped Franklin Delano Roosevelt to deal with the responsibilities and circumstances of his life. Whether in your opinion he did well or ill, it is still interesting to see the background that formed his character and the influences which shaped his actions for the future.

In these last volumes one sees the methods of association with people, and I hope for future historians these will be a help in illuminating the reasons why my husband did certain things in certain ways. I think many people will find these letters interesting.

I am grateful to my son, Elliott, for undertaking the editing of the early volumes and now of these last ones. It is a heavy responsibility and one which only Franklin D. Roosevelt's own son could have carried. We are both extremely grateful for the conscientious research and careful work done by Mr. Joseph P. Lash, who worked with my son from the very beginning on these last two volumes.

In addition, we are grateful to all the people who have provided material of their own which they felt might be an addition to the effort made to elucidate the relationship between my husband, his friends, and co-workers during these later years. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

I may be a little sore because a week ago I made a short radio speech on a national hook-up on the broad subject of State vs. Federal Constitution Rights. I talked about broad principles and did not emphasize the Prohibition angle, but merely stated the constitutional fact of the Eighteenth Amendment. Therefore Walter hopped all over me the next morning, relegated all the rest of the speech to the discard and cursed me for not having made a speech on Prohibition alone!

If Walter would stick to the fundamentals, fewer people would feel that the World first blows hot and then blows cold. Perhaps you and Felix will have some effect. I hope so.

Always sincerely,

Professor Bonbright was one of FDR's three appointees to a commission of nine members set up by the Legislature to recommend changes in the Public Service Commission Law. Six of the appointees were Republican legislators appointed by the Legislature. The clash between Professors Frankfurter and Bonbright, on the one hand, and Walter Lippman, chief editorial writer of the World, on the other, related to the minority and majority reports of this commission.

FDR to Herbert H. Lehman in Albany.

WARM SPRINGS,
MAY 14, 1930

Dear Herbert:

Please excuse me for not writing before this but I have been much occupied with a thousand things down here which had to be attended to and, incidentally, I have been trying to get a little holiday from any thought of Albany!

I saw the article in the World but realized, of course, that it was in the best style of our friend Ernest. However, you and I are just about in the same boat, because you and I both have many reasons why we should not run again this autumn—perfectly good personal reasons and probably wholly in accord with our own personal desires. Nevertheless, you and I both have the same kind of sense of obligation about going through with a task once undertaken and frankly, the only reason either of us would run again is that sense of obligation to a great many million people who may insist we shall try to carry on the work for another two years.

And in the long run I am inclined to think that you and I would be more useful for the next two years in our present position than if we were to return to our own private interests and private life.

I take it that the absence of any mention of the old appendix means that it has either returned to normal or that you are slowly but surely absorbing the old thing and that it will soon be gone without an operation.

I am enclosing a letter from Dr. Kieb and I hope that he is right in all that he says. When you have read it, put it in my files as I want to talk to Osborne about it later on. In the meantime may there be no explosion. Very sincerely yours,

Ernest K. Lindley, Albany correspondent of the New York World, had written that there were grave doubts whether Lieutenant Governor Lehman would consent to run again. The article said that Lehman had turned the lieutenant governorship into a full-time job and that he wanted more time for business and philanthropic and welfare interests.

Dr. Raymond E. C. Kieb was commissioner of correction; "Osborne" was Charles Osborne, Democratic Mayor of Auburn and son of Thomas Mott Osborne, famous prison reformer.

Louis M. Howe to FDR.

MAY 23, 1930

Dear Boss:

The Morrow clippings are quiet interesting, but almost without exception they confine themselves to praising Morrow for his "brave stand," without any real expression of opinion as to whether his idea is worth a hoot or not, although some of them do point out that the Morrow plan would probably bring about the return of the saloon and in this respect is inferior to the Smith plan of two years ago.

I have at last reached the conclusion as to the general kind of a proclamation on this subject which should be made. It should, I think, take this position: First; that you are and always have been sincerely an advocate of temperance. That it is your firm belief that modern conditions, including the automobile and the necessity for steady hands to carry on the more delicate manufacturing processes of today, together with the great increase in recreational amusement facilities for the people, will, in themselves, gradually bring about the abandonment of artificial stimulants. That this is evident, not only in the United States, but in all Countries; that anything which can be done to accelerate this will be a good thing. But that, as in all movements of this kind, temperance stands in more danger from its friends than from its enemies. That the abolition of the saloon was an imperative necessity in this Country, owing to the many evils which followed in its wake, evils which had become so great as to lead two-thirds of the States to attempt the abolition of drinking entirely in an effort to suppress the brothel. But the abolition of saloons should have been done as a first step, and after that the restrictions against the sale of liquor, generally, at any time or place, should have come about gradually as the great mass of people became more willing to forego its use. That the Volstead Act was not a noble experiment, but a hideous mistake; that it has not only failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, but has brought new and previously unheard of evils in its wake. That today a very large majority of the people undoubtedly agree that conditions have become impossible in a different way as they were in the old saloon days and that something must be done about it. That this sentiment needs no Literary Digest Poll to prove it; that so far the Prohibtion question has been publicly discussed and argued largely by two classes of people, those who are unwilling to think of any possible change in the present conditions, and those who believe that we should go back to the conditions which prevailed before the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment. In other words, that a fanatical minority of both Wets and Drys have been allowed to do all the talking. That the time has come for those who are willing to face the situation honestly, and who believe that some way acceptable to a majority of the people to alter present conditions can be worked out, should get together, and by actual concessions agree on some such plan. (So much for your general theory). Secondly, none of this being constructive, I think some kind of constructive suggestion should follow.

My thought is to go on from this point on the theory that whatever is done will have to be done by the States, as independent Sovereigns in general agreement, whether it is a repeal of the amendment, with an anti-saloon substitute, or whether the amendment can be construed by some new kind of a law in a more enforceable way. Such being the case, why not suggest a plan to be presented to the Legislatures of all the States next winter, that they appoint a Commission of three or four representatives to meet with Commissioners of all other States for the purpose of considering the wisest course for this Nation to pursue. All plans could be laid before this body and if two-thirds of them agree, of course, the actual repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, if that is the answer, could be achieved many years before what might be expected at present, the idea being that these Commissions would report back to the Legislatures of their respective States the recommendations made by a majority of the Conference for such action as the States might take eventually, either in the form of a petition to Congress from the Legislature of that State, or in such other ways as may be decided on. In other words, my theory is that, instead of trying to devise a plan which is impossible for the moment, an appeal be made to those who want something done to get together and thrash it out, instead of being led around by the nose by either the Anti-Saloon League or the Society Against the Prohibition Amendment.

This will provide you with something to think about on the way home.

As ever,
LUHOW.

Despite the Nation-wide sensation created by the Morrow pronouncement, FDR did not follow the suggestions made here by Howe, and in fact made no reference to prohibition in his public utterances until the fall campaign. Some of the ideas contained in this memorandum, particularly those on the importance of temperance in modern civilization, were finally included in a campaign speech October 21.

FDR to Burton K. Wheeler in Washington.

ALBANY,
JUNE 3, 1930

My dear Senator Wheeler:

I have been meaning to write to you for the past month. First of all, I want to tell you that personally I was made very happy by your reference to me at the Democratic Club dinner, for the very good reason that I have always thought of you as one of the real leaders of progressive thought and action in this country. Therefore to be considered as real progressive by you means something to me.

As to 1932, however, I am in a somewhat difficult position, first, of having no personal desire to run for a national office, and, secondly, because I feel that the more I get into the national limelight the more

Son-in-law Curtis Dall and James Roosevelt are standing, and John Roosevelt and Franklin D., jr., are in the foreground.

The photo was made at the Executive Mansion in Albany during a brief reconciliation, when Roosevelt and Smith united to force Lehman on a reluctant State Convention.

This was on January 1, 1931, when FDR was still writing friends that "I am not in any sense a candidate for 1932 . . . I have no hankering, secret or otherwise, to be a candidate."

'...No Hankering to Be a Candidate'

it is going to hurt my present work as Governor of New York.

I have been much interested in the editorial comment on what you said at the dinner, and one thought stands out quite clearly in my mind. Many of these editorials cry down the thought that the power question will become a leading national issue, and yet in crying it down they give the impression that their one fear is that it will become a great national issue.

For instance, I hear confidentially that at the Governors' Conference in Salt Lake City on June 30th, power will not be one of the subjects discussed, though a number of Governors had hoped it would be. Every effort is being made to put the lid on and keep it there.

I am wondering if when the Senate adjourns you will be coming to New York. If so, I wish much that you could stop in and see me in Albany. I expect to be there practically all the time except from June 26th to July 7th, when I shall be on the Utah trip.

In any event, I hope you will keep me in touch with the general thought in the Mountain States on the power question.

Very sincerely yours,

At the Jefferson Day dinner at the National Democratic Club in New York, Senator Wheeler had said: "As I look about for a general to lead the Democratic Party on these two issues, the tariff and control of power and public utilities, I ask to whom can we go. I say that, if the Democratic Party of New York will reelect Franklin Roosevelt Governor, the West will demand his nomination for President and the whole country will elect him."

FDR to Mrs. Caspar Whitney in New York.

WARM SPRINGS.
DECEMBER 8, 1930.

My dear Mrs. Whitney:

I have had such a flood of mail since election that I have postponed writing you until I could collect my thoughts. I much like your idea of the National Industrial Planning Board as a fact-gatherer and this is one of the matters which I shall put up to the Governors of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, when we meet the end of January. As a matter of fact, while I am very much opposed to the extension of Federal action in most economic social problems, nevertheless the Federal Government has a very distinct function as a fact-gatherer for the whole Nation.

In regard to trips around the country by me, I have been in much of a dilemma during the past two years and probably will continue to be so for sometime to come. The real difficulty is that quite frankly I mean what I have said—that I am not in any sense a candidate for 1932, partly because I have seen so much of the White House ever since 1892, that I have no hankering, secret or otherwise, to be a candidate; and the other reason is that the Albany task is so big and so important, that it would suffer by my taking trips around the country.

Of course, as you know, until two years ago I had been working essentially in the national field ever since 1913 and it is difficult for me to eliminate wholly any discussion of national or international affairs. On the other hand, the minute I make a speech outside the State of New York the idiot newspapers treat it as an announcement of my candidacy. So you see that I am between the devil and the deep blue sea.

I hope very soon that I shall have a chance to talk with you about this and many other things.

Very sincerely yours,

Mrs. Whitney, a great friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, was extremely active with the League of Women Voters and the Democratic Women.

FDR to Alfred E. Smith in New York.

ALBANY,
FEB. 28, 1931

Dear Al:

I have been trying to get you on the telephone. I do not know what the plans for next Thursday's meeting of the National Committee are, but the more I hear from different parts of the country, the more certain I am that it would be very contrary to the established powers and precedents of the National Committee, were they to pass resolutions of any kind affecting party policies at this time. This does not apply, of course, to any methods of financing, nor to any plan for building up organization work on a national basis.

Historically, the National Committee has always recognized that in between Conventions, the spokesmen on policy matters are, primarily, the Democratic Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, together with individuals high in the Party Councils, who, however, speak as individuals.

As I said before, I have no idea of what the plans for the meeting are, but I am disturbed by newspaper reports.

As ever yours,

A few days later Smith declared in an interview that he could see no objection to the national committee's expressing an opinion on any question.

FDR to Henry French Hollis in Paris.

ALBANY,
MARCH 24, 1931

Dear Henry:

It is good to get that nice long letter of yours and Eleanor and I have been much interested in hearing all about your life. I certainly envy you and the next time I come over I think I shall invite you to act as my chaperon and guide to the sights of France. I envy you your golf. You are evidently hitting the ball even better than in the old days.

Things here are getting fairly exciting. I had to have a row with the National Chairman about two weeks ago because our friend Raskob wanted to put through various resolutions committing the party on tariff, business mergers, prohibition, etc. I got our State Committee to come out in opposition to resolutions on the ground that they are not a function of the National Committee. By the time the meeting was held the proposal for resolutions was dropped. Everything would have gone well but for the fact that Joe Robinson made a somewhat inflammatory speech and, of course, was answered in kind.

The depression continues in spite of what you may read in the papers. The President has shown an extraordinary lack of leadership. Everything will be well for the Democracy if we keep our heads and do not forget the economic issues.

I am personally still doing nothing though I understand that various clubs have been started in different States all over the country. It is bad enough to have to be Governor!

Do write me the news from time to time and don't forget that you might just as well arrange now to spend the spring, summer, and autumn of 1932 in the United States. The party needs you, and I might add the Nation does too.

As ever yours,

Hollis, first New Hampshire Democrat since 1852 to be elected to the Senate, had frequently dined with FDR at Washington's Metropolitan Club in World War I days.

The "inflammatory" speech of Joe Robinson, vice presidential candidate in 1928 and Democratic leader in the Senate, was a vehement attack on Raskob's proposals for modification of the party's policy on prohibition and the anti-trust laws. FDR and his friends, mindful of the bitter antagonisms that wrecked the party after the 1924 and 1928 conventions, were concerned with keeping the party united, even as they pushed toward nomination for FDR.

FDR to Ernest K. Lindley in New York.

ALBANY,
MAY 31, 1931

Dear Ernest:

I am just off. Here are the two chapters, I think they are splendid. I am sorry I had to take out those two stories but I am afraid they would not go so well!

What do you think of the title —THE DEMOCRATIC ROOSEVELT? Sam and I racked our brains last night and this was the only one that pleased us.

Always sincerely,

Lindley had been covering FDR, first for the New York World and then for the Herald Tribune. Lindley had written the editors that FDR was not very cooperative in the preparation of this biography and that Mrs. Roosevelt and Louis Howe were much more helpful. FDR did tell Lindley a number of anecdotes, with the stipulation that the written version would be submitted to him before publication. One of the stories FDR took out was his detailed account of the efforts in 1920 of the "Sunday Night Supper Club," to which FDR, along with other young Wilsonian liberals, belonged, to get Herbert Hoover to declare himself a Democrat; and also his account of how Senators Penrose and Lodge engineered Hoover's announcement as a Republican.

The title of the Lindley book, when it appeared in November, was "Franklin D. Roosevelt, A Career in Progressive Democracy."

A later photo of FDR and Louis M. Howe, his secretary, friend and adviser, who was the writer or recipient of many of these letters.

FDR to Robert W. Bingham in Louisville.

ALBANY,
SEPT. 29, 1931

My Dear Judge Bingham:

Many thanks for your nice note. I am reminded of President Wilson, who said to me early in his first term something to this effect:

"It is only once in a generation that a people can be lifted above material things. That is why conservative government is in the saddle two-thirds of the time."

I am fully convinced that the cycle has swung again after twelve years and that it is our turn next.

It was delightful to see you the other day and I hope you will surely let us know the next time you come this way.

Always sincerely yours,

Judge Bingham, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, was one of the early supporters of the FDR candidacy, and was later appointed Ambassador to the Court of St. James by FDR.

FDR to John Godfrey Saxe in New York.

ALBANY,
NOV. 3, 1931

Dear John:

In the rush of the past week I have not had time to write you but you probably saw my statement on the Amendment, made just about the time your letter came. I am dictating this before the polls close and I hope that one, three and five will go through. What a queer thing that was for Al to fight so bitterly on No. 3. I cannot help remembering the fact that while he was Governor I agreed with almost all the policies he recommended but I was against one or two during those eight years. However, for the sake of party solidarity, I kept my mouth shut. I could readily have taken a public position in opposition to the Governor but frankly, I did not think the issue was of vital enough importance to cause a party dispute.

Always sincerely,

On October 14 Al Smith, at a Tammany Hall rally, attacked the $20 million reforestation amendment to be voted on in November. Since passage of the amendment had been urged by FDR, Smith's attack was regarded widely as a challenge to a test of strength in New York between the two men. FDR won this test when the voters approved the amendment.

Saxe was counsel to the Democratic State Committee.

FDR to Alfred E. Smith.

ALBANY,
NOV. 10, 1931

Dear Al:

The first trial balance of the budget will be done next Monday the 16th and I'm coming to N. Y. that night. Don't you want to run in any time on Tuesday or Wednesday the 17th or 18th and talk with me about it. Come to lunch at 49 East 65 or else later in the afternoon. I go to Warm Springs Wed. evening at 6.

Love to the family and my best to you.

As ever,

Smith and Roosevelt did confer and there was considerable speculation in the press concerning the subject of the meeting, with the general presumption that it dealt with the presidential race. Clark Howell, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, saw Smith shortly after his meeting with FDR and sent FDR the following detailed account of Smith's attitude.

Clark Howell to FDR in Warm Springs.

NEW YORK,
DEC. 2, 1931

Dear Franklin:

I have just telegraphed you that I had a long conference with "Alfred" this morning and that I would write you details. You, of course, understood that I referred to Governor Smith. I had made an engagement with him at 10:30 this morning, at his office in the Empire State. He seemed glad to see me. For a few minutes we indulged in generalities and then I got down to business, by telling him that my support of him "through thick and thin," and that Georgia's attitude toward him in the past, warranted me in having a perfectly frank talk with him, and in asking him to be perfectly frank with me. He replied that no man in the South had stood by him better than I had—that he was grateful, and that he would deal perfectly frankly with me.

I then said—"Governor, you hold in the palm of your hand the assurance of an overwhelming Democratic victory next year, or you are in a position where you could jeopardize the present prospect of sure success.

"How?" said he—"By your attitude toward Franklin Roosevelt," I said. "With your support of him all opposition to him will vanish, and his nomination will be a mere formality. The country expects you to support him, and it will not believe that you can possibly do otherwise."

"The hell I can't," he said—"but"—continuing. "I do not mean that I will not support him. I am for the party first, above any man, and I will support the man who seems best for the party." I then went into detail to show him that no other possible candidate could give the party the same assurance of support as you could. "But you speak for the South," he said, and "you don't understand the situation up here as I do." I told him that you would carry every Southern state, and that you would get perhaps three-fourths of the electoral votes of the States west of the Mississippi. "But that is not this section," he said. "With your support it is," I said, adding, "You know that with Roosevelt as the nominee it means New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey." He said he "doubted" it.

He then went on to say that "millions" of people in this section resented "the way he had been treated"—"that no Democrat had ever polled as many votes as he had, etc."

"Governor," I then said, "is there any ground for personal hostility on your part against Roosevelt?" "No," he said—"socially we are friends. He has always been kind to me and my family, and has gone out of his way to be agreeable to us at the Mansion at Albany, but"—then he arose, stamped his foot, and said—"Do you know, by God, that he has never consulted me about a damn thing since he has been Governor? He has taken bad advice and from sources not friendly to me. He has ignored me" And then with increased fervor, and slamming his fist on the table, he said—"by God, he invited me to his house before he recently went to Georgia, and did not even mention to me the subject of his candidacy."

I told him that you had been careful not to put yourself in the attitude of a candidate at this time, and I asked him if he had mentioned to you the subject of your candidacy. He said "no" —that it was up to you to broach the subject, etc.

Then he got on the subject of prohibition, and became quite violent, indicating that you were "dodging." "Why in hell don't he speak out—he has been more outspoken on the question than even I have been, and now ain't the time for trimming!" I asked him what he would do on this question—"Speak out," he said. "Speak what?" I replied.

"I would tell the country the time has come for a 'show-down' against the iniquity of the 18th amendment." "Do you think we should make an open campaign for the repeal of the amendment?" I asked. "No, but we should 'demand a referendum!' " I quite agreed with him as to the wisdom of that policy, stating that it was wise from every standpoint, and that such a declaration should receive the support of the drys as well as the wets—that I had, in the Constitution, warmly commended Raskob's statement to that effect, and that while I had no authority to speak for you that I felt sure you would support such a declaration. This seemed to please him—but he insisted that it was too early now for committals, and that some of your "damn fool friends" here were at work organizing and arranging for Roosevelt dinners, etc., and that they were doing you "more harm than good," etc. I told him that when he was a candidate his friends had gone much further, thus far in advance of the nomination than yours had now, and that thus far you had never said a word for the public as indicating your candidacy. "But the situation is different now," he said, though not indicating in what respect. He concluded by emphasizing that he was not committed for or against you—and that he was going to take his time before saying what he was going to do.

So there you have it! And I give it to you for what it is worth.

My recommendation is that you see him upon your return to New York and talk with him on the subject. I think it will go a long way toward getting him in line. By handling him diplomatically I believe he will come around all right. If he don't, we will nominate you without his support. But of course it is best to have it. I will be in Atlanta Monday morning. All this, of course, confidential—

Regards—
CLARK HOWELL.

FDR to the Editor of the Butte Standard in Montana.

ALBANY,
DEC. 29, 1931

My dear Sir:

A friend of mine sent me your very delightful editorial of December 2nd and I know you will not mind my telling you personally, and not for publication, that my only kick about it is that you call it "The Wheel Chair at Albany" and say "The fact is that while he has not dispensed with his wheel chair." As a matter of fact, I don't use a wheel chair at all except a little kitchen chair on wheels to get about my room while dressing before I am dressed, and solely for the purpose of saving time. I don't think this can be properly considered "use of a wheel chair" because in my work in the Capitol and elsewhere I do not use one at all.

I know you will not mind my writing you this friendly line and I hope some day if you come east, you will come in here and see me.

Yours very truly,

FDR to Roy W. Howard in New York.

ALBANY,
JAN. 15, 1932

Dear Roy Howard:

I wish you could run up to Albany some day next week or the week after, as I want to talk with you about economies and a number of other things. Also I want to tell you of the progress I am making with land utilization.

Do give me a ring and let me know when you can come up. If you can come for the night I hope you will bring Mrs. Howard with you.

Always sincerely,

This attempt to woo Howard, chief executive of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, was not successful. Scripps-Howard declared for Smith in the preconvention maneuvering, but its real candidate was Newton D. Baker.

On January 23, 1932, FDR formally announced his candidacy by authorizing North Dakota Democrats to enter his name in the preferential party primaries there. This followed a Roosevelt victory at the Democratic National Committee meeting January 9, when George Jackson, FDR's candidate, was elected secretary and John J. Raskob desisted from any move to get a wet declaration out of the meeting.

Then on February 6, Al Smith announced that he would be available for the nomination if it were offered to him, and three days later Jouett Shouse urged local Democratic organizations not to instruct their delegates to the June 27 convention. To counter this strategy, the Roosevelt camp redoubled its pressure for delegates with ironclad commitments to FDR.

FDR to Frances Perkins in New York (telegram).

ALBANY,

I approve your faith.

FDR

Frances Perkins, at this time state industrial commissioner, had wired FDR from New York on March 4 that "This day next year will be interesting."

FDR to Josiah W. Bailey in Washington.

ALBANY,
MARCH 11, 1932

Dear Senator:

In view of the occurrences of the past few days—the New Hampshire primary, the Minnesota Convention, and now the general mix-up over Governor Smith's active or inactive candidacy—I wish much that you would send me a confidential line to tell me how you think all of this effects North Carolina.

I personally am continuing to attend to my own business in Albany. The Legislature is about to adjourn but I have to stay here to pass on somewhere between seven and eight hundred bills during the next three or four weeks.

I am inclined to think that everything is going all right and that the keynote must be to avoid deadlock and if possible bitterness.

My kindest regards,

Always sincerely,

The "occurrences" were a sweeping victory over Smith in the New Hampshire primaries and a victory at the Minnesota convention.

FDR to James F. Byrnes.

ALBANY,
MARCH 11, 1932

Dear Senator:

I hear that you have been down to South Carolina and because this comes after Ritchie's visit there, I wish much that you would write me confidentially what the reaction was and how things stand.

I wish much that I might see you some day soon. The Legislature is about to adjourn and I shall be here in Albany for the next three or four weeks attending to the thirty-day bills. On Saturdays and Sundays I expect to be at Hyde Park and it would be fine if you could run up and spend the night with us at either place any time that is convenient to you.

Always sincerely yours,

Byrnes assured FDR that South Carolina would be solidly for him.

FDR to George Kent Shuler in Washington.

ALBANY,
MARCH 15, 1932

Dear George:

I have been a long time in writing to you. That was a nice letter which you wrote and I hope our friend does not ask you who should place me in nomination. I would not like to have to pick your pieces up from in front of the Empire State Building! However, I, too, would still insist that you were right.

I hope I shall see you soon.

Always sincerely,

Shuler, an editor of Plain Talk, had run on the New York State ticket with Al Smith in 1924. He reminded FDR that in that year, when FDR had asked him who there was from upstate New York to nominate Al Smith at the Madison Square Garden convention, he had suggested that FDR himself was the best person. If Smith were to ask him now who should place FDR in nomination at Chicago, Shuler's reply would be "Smith."

FDR to Elisabeth Marbury in New York.

ALBANY,
APRIL 4, 1932

Dear Elisabeth:

You are right about starting in soon to build up Maine. This is substantiated by the amusing remark of one of my friends who telephoned me after the Convention that out of one thousand delegates there were one thousand clamoring candidates for Governor, Mayor, county officers, selectman, constable and dog catcher. Everybody wants to run this year.

I am to be in New York next Saturday and Sunday. Do try to arrange with Eleanor to come to 49 East 65th.

I think the Washington visit will be impossible because I have an economic conference in Albany the day before which will continue on the 13th and also the Legislative Committee starts that day on the investigation of State Departments. Enough said!

Affectionately yours,

The Democratic State Convention in Maine instructed its 12 delegates to cast a solid vote for FDR. Elisabeth Marbury, Democratic National Committeewoman from New York and one of FDR's most energetic supporters, felt that the important job now was to strengthen the organization.

The "Washington visit" was an invitation to speak at the Jefferson Day dinner in Washington April 13. Al Smith was also to be a speaker.

Lincoln Worked Long on Speech At Gettysburg

By E. B. Long

CHICAGO.—Four score and seven years ago Abraham Lincoln spoke his immortal words at Gettysburg, and today no one is positive exactly what he said there.

In observance of the eighty-seventh anniversary of the dedication of the Gettysburg Battlefield Cemetery in 1863, the Chicago Historical Society has brought together for the first time the five extant copies of the Gettysburg Address in Lincoln's own handwriting.

The society will display the five copies from November 19 through November 30. Special ceremonies will be held November 19, the day on which the address will be "four score and seven years" old. Governor Stevenson of Illinois and Chicago's Mayor Kennelly will be guests of honor.

The director of the society, Paul Angle, noted Lincoln author, estimates the value of the five documents at $350,000 to $500,000. They will be guarded at all times by private detectives and by honor guards of the armed services, Chicago and State police. Special donations have been made to cover the expenses of the exhibit.

ANGLE SAID that one purpose of the exhibit is to show the public that Lincoln did not deliver this speech spontaneously with little preparation, as is commonly believed.

In fact, Angle said, it shows that Lincoln spent considerable time beforehand planning what he was going to say, and even in copies written after the event made further changes which improved the literary quality.

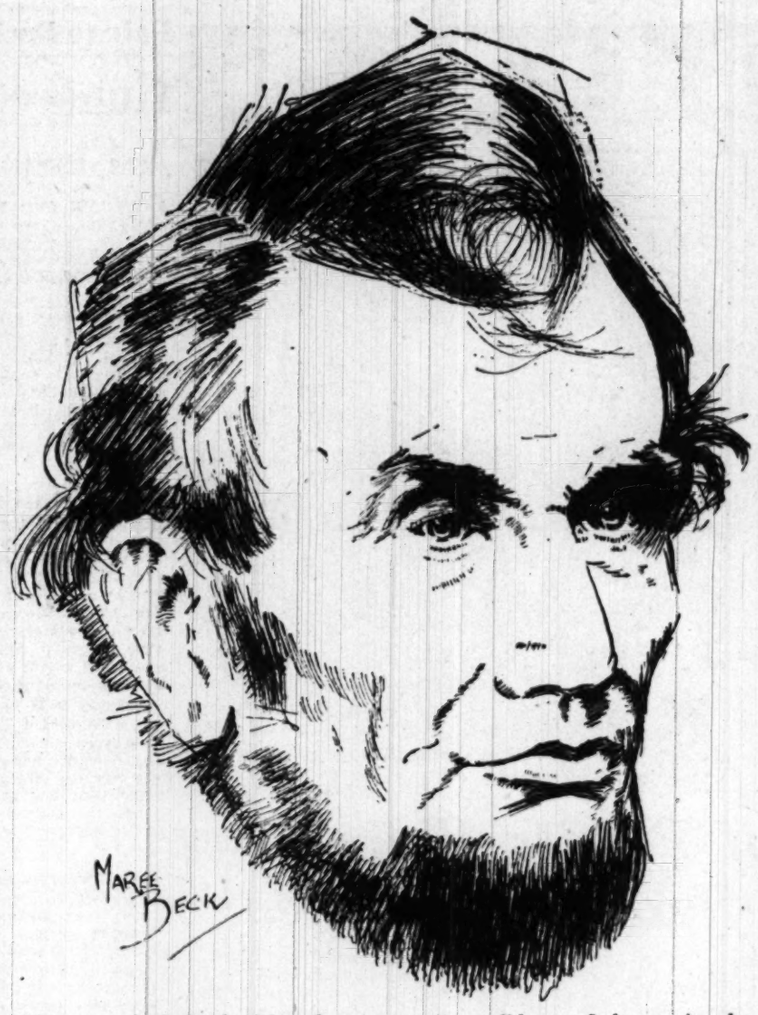
Angle said that no one is quite sure of the exact words Lincoln used at the dedication. The newspaper accounts are mostly inaccurate and varying and not many papers printed the text at all.

In fact, many papers almost ignored the speech. A Harrisburg, Pa., paper called it "silly," and the Illinois State Register of Springfield, Lincoln's home town, called the assertion that the new Nation had been conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men were created equal, "a political falsehood."

Angle said most people believe that Lincoln scribbled the address on a scrap of paper on the train from Washington to Gettysburg. This is completely wrong, Angle says, and just "a pretty story." Lincoln's remarks were written out carefully several days before he left Washington. A second draft was written at the house of David Wills in Gettysburg on the morning of the dedication. This is the copy Lincoln held in his hand when he spoke.

THE FIRST COPY Lincoln gave to his secretary, John Hay, whose children presented it to the Library of Congress in 1916. It is written on one side of two sheets of paper. Lincoln was either interrupted in writing it or his pen went dry, because most of the concluding sentence is written in pencil.

The second draft, written at Gettysburg, was also presented to the Library of Congress by the Hay family. It is written in ink on both sides of the paper.



This pen-and-ink sketch of Lincoln was done for the Gettysburg anniversary by Maree Beck, an Australian girl who came here from Sydney three years ago and now is secretary to the research officer of the Indian Embassy. Daughter of a well-known Sydney artist, she has made portraiture her hobby. Her talent has made her something of an autograph collector, incidentally, because many of her subjects sign her sketches — one of them, Premier Nehru

In January, 1864, Edward Everett, the principal speaker at Gettysburg, wrote Lincoln for a copy to be sold along with the manuscript of his oration at the New York Sanitary Fair for the benefit of widows and orphans of Union soldiers. The third copy passed through several hands before it was purchased for $60,000 by the school children of Illinois, aided by Marshall Field. It is now in the Illinois State Historical Society at Springfield.

Lincoln wrote the fourth copy for another fair, held in Baltimore in 1864, at the request of diplomat and historian George Bancroft. Bancroft planned to reproduce the address in a publication. For this purpose a heading and signature were needed, and Bancroft asked Lincoln for another copy. Lincoln permitted him to keep the fourth copy, which is now the property of Cornell University.

THE FIFTH and last copy is written on three sheets of paper and bears the full signature, "Abraham Lincoln." This copy was bought at auction in April, 1949, by Oscar Cintas of Havana, former Cuban Ambassador to the United States, for $53,000.

Angle said the majority of the differences in the five copies are in punctuation, paragraphing, spelling and in changes in small words. However, there are some important variations.

The familiar words, "under God," in the last sentence were not in the first and second copies, but were inserted in the third. Also, where the second and succeeding copies say, "It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this," the original draft says, "This we may in all propriety do."

Angle says these revisions, along with occasional crossed-out and changed words, are further evidence of the care Lincoln took with the address that is a treasured part of the American heritage.

Age-Old Problems Face Reds in China

This is the sixth background article in the "Information on World Affairs" program which is being carried out by The Washington Post and many schools of the area. Each Sunday for 26 weeks, The Washington Post will publish a similar analytical article. Each Thursday, The Post will print 30 multiple-choice questions (15 questions on the Sunday article and 15 on current news events). Readers will find these questions a stimulating test of their general information. On the same day, the same questions will be given in classrooms to junior and senior high school students. On Saturday, the answers will be presented.

Inquiries about the program should be addressed to Information on World Affairs Program, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

The program is being carried out under the direction of J. Edward Gerald, Department of Journalism, and Edgar B. Wesley of the School of Education of the University of Minnesota.

WHAT DOES the future hold for China's mass of citizenry—an estimated 463 million people, more than triple the population of the United States?

In the last year, China has changed governments again, the Communists of Mao Tse-tung taking over, by military force, from the Nationalist regime of Chiang Kai-shek.

To many of the little people of China, however, the change so far probably has made little difference. To the average Chinese family, through the years, it has mattered little what regime was in power. Their concern is not with governments or with politics, but with the basic struggle to keep alive.

In no other large country in the world, with the exception of India, is human life more of a gamble than it is in China. There the threat of hunger is never more than an arm's length away. Flood, famine and disease are ancient horsemen who have ridden China's earth from days beyond historic memory.

Even if the people of China could find the energy, aside from the grim business of staying alive, to evince much interest in governmental matters, it is unlikely they could muster much opposition to the Communist rule.

Despite the Nationalist claims from Formosa, there seems little reason to believe that much organized resistance against Mao can be found in China. The regime of Chiang had become so discredited through its weakness, corruption and loss of face that it has few friends left.

A great many of China's people awaited the advance of the Communist armies with a fatalistic attitude. Communist propaganda undoubtedly had some attraction, and the Chiang government had lost its grip.

THE ACTUAL IMPACT of communism inside China cannot be told with any degree of certainty, for, as with all other Communist countries, little news is coming out of China. What news does come must be suspect as propaganda.

The best guess would be that, for the moment, at least, there has been no profound change. Whether the Communists can carry out their over-all program of reform and rehabilitation of China is something else again. China has been torn by civil war for a quarter century.

The Communists probably will go about the communization of the country rather cautiously in order not to antagonize the people. Opinions differ on how much resistance the Communist Party in China will encounter in the future.

But the problem of China cannot be cured solely by control of inflation and crime, or by land reform, which the Communists have used as the backbone of their propaganda.

CHINA'S BASIC PROBLEM is no different today from what it was a hundred years ago. Revolution may have intensified it, but it did not change it. The pitifully little progress which was made prior to the Japanese invasion has been wiped out. Now the Communists must start from scratch again.

China's basic trouble is overpopulation in relation to present production. It farms with hoes because it has no modern farm equipment. The farms are too tiny and the people too poor. It uses humans as pack animals because it has few railroads, few roads of any kind, in fact. It suffers from floods because it has no modern technology to control its rivers. Its waterpower goes unharnessed for lack of capital and know-how. Ninety percent of its industrial production is made by hand because it has few factories.

Its people die from preventable diseases because they are too poor to afford modern medicine and have not been taught even the rudiments of sanitation. It starves because of an inadequate system of distribution, so that while there may be a surplus of food in one province, the people in another province a hundred miles away die from lack of food.

THE JOB of introducing modern agricultural practices, of developing an industrial system, of teaching the people sanitation and educating them to the benefits of medical technology is one that will take superhuman effort and many years to accomplish.

To start with, the Chinese people would have to be educated and then, to some extent, reeducated in their thinking. Illiteracy is high and there is no such thing as free compulsory education. The civil war now has scattered what few teachers there were, schools have been destroyed and educational material has disappeared. Once again it would be a matter of starting from scratch.

The Communists' land reform plan, while it has propaganda appeal, is not the answer to China's rehabilitation. The idea of giving each man a piece of land may sound good to land-hungry Chinese peasants, but the answer may be larger farms which adapt themselves to modern tillage methods, rather than smaller farms.

THE AIM of developing industry, shared by Nationalists and Communists alike, is sound for two reasons:

It would develop jobs for more people and would produce some of the things the people need.

It would absorb some of the farm population, which would make possible the combining of small farm tracts for more efficient agriculture.

But the development of industry calls for capital, and where can China get capital? Communistic attitudes toward foreign capital do not make it probable that any will be risked, no matter what guarantees the government may make. The only possible source of capital for Communist China would seem to be the United States. Russia, it might be noted here, is not known for making loans.

Without industry, foreign trade or capital, China's economic situation is not enviable. And any gains in the fields of education, health and social benefits must rely to a great extent upon some measures of prosperity.

WHETHER Communist China can gain, in time, some cooperation from the rest of the world remains doubtful. Without such cooperation, her task will be all the harder, if, in fact, it can be done at all.

The United States is currently following a hands-off policy. Its stand has been made controversial by its help to Chiang Kai-shek in Formosa only a few months after a State Department "white paper" publicly washed our hands of Chiang's regime.

The fact of the matter seems to be that at the moment there is little the United States can do regarding the Chinese mainland. China is a Communist country and we have made well known our stand against communism; China is also an ally and close partner of Russia in aggression in the Far East. The historic policy of the United States has been to support an open and independent China.

Sweden Fears A 'Stalin Lake' In the Baltic

By Gustav Svensson

STOCKHOLM.—A Russian master plan to transform the Baltic Sea into a "Stalin lake" seems to be in full swing, according to many observers in this Baltic capital.

References to such Russian designs, appearing lately with striking frequency in the Swedish press, apparently are not based on any intelligence leaks in the Iron Curtain. They are mostly founded on a combination of recent Russian moves in the Baltic that seem to fit easily into a disquieting pattern.

The Swedes are clearly worried.

The plan envisions Russian control over the narrow straits between the European continent and the Scandinavian peninsula through which a considerable part of Russia's submarines would have to pass to reach the Atlantic in the event of another world war.

Russia already is pretty close to these vital outlets from the big inland sea where she keeps much of her navy.

In 1940, Russia held only a narrow 100-mile coastal strip at the bottom of the Gulf of Finland. As a result of tremendous expansion on the Baltic in the past 10 years, the Soviet has virtual control of the whole Baltic coast, from formerly Finnish Viipuri to Luebeck. That puts Russia considerably less than 100 miles from the straits at several points.

MANY MILITARY experts here agree that, in the event of a third world war, Russia is likely to jump immediately at the Baltic approaches to the Atlantic. They also believe that the Russians are wasting no time in preparing themselves for the jump.

Reports of accelerated Russian activity on the Baltic have been numerous in the Swedish press in the last year. While the details of such reports are difficult to verify, Swedish sources list these as known facts:

Moscow has sealed off the whole Baltic area to foreigners, with the exception only of Leningrad. Even this single city on Russia's extensive Baltic coastline may not be visited without advance notice to the Russian Foreign Office.

A great naval expansion program—described by high ranking Swedish navy officers as far exceeding Russia's defensive needs—is being pushed at Russia's old and new shipyards on the Baltic.

Russia is rapidly constructing what has been described as a gigantic "Baltic wall" of coastal defenses extending from the northern shore of the Gulf of Finland to the southern Baltic. The "wall" is known to include several sites for guided missiles as well as an extensive screen of radar stations.

Reports in the Swedish press of large-scale combined V-weapon and radar maneuvers in the Baltic area last summer, however, belong to the large category of unverified details.

THE LIBERAL Stockholm newspaper Aftonbladet said in an editorial that "during the last few years the whole Baltic coast from Kronstadt to Luebeck has been transformed into one big Russian naval base."

There is a whole series of recent events which—viewed against this general background—have caused both anger and misgivings among the Swedes.

Early this year, heavily armed Russian patrol ships captured a number of Swedish and Danish fishing vessels in international waters. The ships were detained for weeks in Russian-held ports.

The Swedes reacted vehemently to what the Swedish Foreign Minister, Oesten Unden, termed a "high-handed and flagrant breach of international law." Swedish feelings were reflected in newspaper headlines like "Red Pirates," "Piracy in the Baltic" and "Systematic Terror in the Baltic."

In April, Soviet fighters shot down a United States Navy Privateer plane over Baltic waters. The 10 American crew members were never found, but United States equipment kept floating ashore for weeks in Sweden and Denmark. This caused numerous newspapers to accuse Russia of attempting to transform the Baltic Sea into what the big liberal daily Dagens Nyheter called a "Stalin lake."

In June, an authoritative Soviet journal recorded a Russian claim for the "efficient closing" of the Baltic to all warships belonging to non-Baltic powers and for Soviet control of the Baltic outlets to the Atlantic.

Presented in issue No. 5 of Soviet State and Law, the journal of the Law Institute of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, this claim sent a cold shudder down the spines of the Scandinavian governments. The fact that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky had been the editor in chief of this journal tended to lend additional weight to the publication of the claim.

Also in June, Moscow notified Sweden formally of her claim for a 12-mile limit in the Baltic instead of the 3 or 4-mile limit applied by all her neighbors. Sweden and Denmark joined in a protest, describing it as an "occupation" of the open sea. The protest was rejected by Russia last August.

The Russian 12-mile limit announcement, however, failed to explain the Russian "piracy" in the Baltic.

The Swedish Foreign Minister told Parliament that one Swedish vessel had been pursued by a heavily armed Russian patrol ship from a point 45 miles off the Polish coast across the middle of the Baltic.

THERE WERE several other things. Among them was the fact that this year Russia, for the first time in history, appointed an admiral, Konstantin Rodionov, as Ambassador to Stockholm. Rear Admiral Rodionov was Russia's Ambassador to Athens until 1947, when the civil war in Greece was still in full swing.

Last August one of his aides, the naval attache, Comdr. Dmitri Laritchev, was "severely reprimanded" by the Swedish military authorities for yachting in a forbidden fortified coastal area where, according to a Foreign Office announcement, he had been observed "taking photos and making other observations on the shore."

Last September two Soviet Embassy chauffeurs were found in a prohibited area during military maneuvers.

According to verified reports, Russian naval units have made several long sweeps this year along most of Sweden's Baltic coastline. The Swedes were particularly incensed by reports, causing angry editorials all over the country, that the Russian warships had hugged the Swedish 3-mile limit after Russia herself had proclaimed a 12-mile limit.

Also this year, the Russian press and radio outbursts against Sweden have reached unprecedented heights.

The present state of Swedish-Russian feelings may be illustrated by a formal Soviet note on Baltic refugees to Sweden on August 30. The language of this note, according to competent sources, surpassed anything ever handed to this country by Nazi diplomats during Hitler's heyday.

It accused Swedish authorities of employing "deceit, threats and open violence" in their "continued practice of lawless persecution of Soviet citizens." It also charged the Swedish Foreign Office with resorting to "open fraud . . . to mislead the Soviet Embassy."

The note was rejected by Sweden the following day as "lacking foundation and both factually and formally insulting."

THE SWEDES don't think they have yet reached the end of their troubles with Russia.

The publication of the unofficial Soviet claim for the closing of the Baltic and Soviet control over the Baltic straits has been followed by strong Soviet press attacks against courtesy visits to Swedish ports by Western warships.

If a conference on the fate of the Baltic straits is what Russia is driving at, Russia might suggest herself, Poland, Finland, Eastern Germany, Denmark and Sweden. Or she might even—maybe as a bargaining point—suggest the participation also of Esthonia, Latvia and Lithuania, which are all Soviet republics.

In either case, Sweden and Denmark would definitely be in a minority position.

Party Backsliding Worries Kremlin

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

RUSSIA is in the midst of an unpublicized yet serious political crisis which is indirectly baring Bolshevism's basic weakness.

Behind a screen of dialectical verbiage, Soviet leaders are practically admitting that Bolshevism can be pushed just so far before it begins to disintegrate into opportunism, indifference or mere lip service.

Although boasts of Bolshevik infallibility are still sounded at every occasion, an undertone of anxiety is evident in current political exhortations to party members and the people in general. Whether in the form of warnings or pleadings, these statements strongly indicate that Bolshevik totalitarianism is showing diminishing returns.

This conclusion is borne out by official declarations that many party members—mostly in economics and agriculture—are beginning to bypass party councils in pursuit of their professions. Said Pravda less than three weeks ago:

". . . some party workers recently diminished their efforts as regards the party political questions and forgot the party political work. Having engrossed themselves in economic problems, they began to concentrate incorrectly on economic work at the expense of political work."

In passing, the paper warned such heretics that Stalin himself has emphasized that "politics cannot be divorced from economy."

It also noted indignantly that "party political work on . . . city municipal enterprises has been pushed into the background. In the economic work (party officials) have begun to see only the beginning and the end of everything."

A NOTEWORTHY fact about such criticisms is that they have been building up for some time, starting as just part of the usual party prattle and gradually becoming a distinct government attack. This attack, moreover, has been aimed at party officials as well as many enterprises throughout the country.

Major criticism has been directed at party workers outside Moscow. Being out of Moscow's immediate view, it is said, they too often make important decisions without benefit of party meetings.

Government officials have expressed "most serious concern" over reports that many rural cadres meet infrequently and then for only a few minutes during which the chairman himself is obliged to make formal decisions. Also disturbing was the discovery that many party cadres had remained static for a long time, some even losing members.

IN DECRYING membership losses, the party hierarchy has charged district leaders either with inexcusable boredom or outright conspiracy to stay in power by barring new blood from their organizations.

The most common complaint, however, is that party members are so "carried away with the solution of economic problems" that they forget "their main tasks—political work among the masses and raising the level of all party organization activities."

When apprised of these failings, it is said, these persons are profusely sorry—then they lapse into the same practices as soon as party inspectors are out of sight.

AS THE official organ of the Communist Party, Pravda is always quick to spell out the sins and the Bolshevik moral in all reports of ideological slips. In a recent editorial, it said:

"Comrade Stalin teaches that agricultural successes and their continuity depend entirely on the success of party organizational and political work.

"It must be said, however, that some party organizations underestimate the value of political work among the agricultural population, not showing enough concern and assistance to the collective farm organizations."

While such lecturing has only now taken the form of an active campaign, the conditions under attack have persisted for a long time, often exploding into minor scandals. One such scandal revealed that many collective farm organizations distributed collective or kolkhoz property in the guise of legal bonuses.

AT ONE collective farm, the Communist leaders met quite formally and agreed — without any ideological qualms — that they merited bonuses. With fine disregard of both the spirit and letter of Communist teachings, they forthwith took their bonuses in the form of livestock, houses, barns, bicycles and various items of farm equipment.

Thus, according to a subsequent official account of the incident, "by decision of the general meeting of the 'Eighth March' kolkhoz, Sredne - Akhtubinski District, the artel chairman, Badin, was awarded a house; the bookkeeper who had been working at the kolkhoz for about a year, and the chairman of the auditing commission were each awarded a cow."

As a parting shot, the reporting agent tersely observed: "The decision to grant bonuses was made at a non-competent meeting."

While such incidents appear to be merely amusing, they really indicate the average Russian's resistance to complete state supervision. And, inversely, these same incidents expose the state's continuing efforts to impose a single will upon the average Russian.

IT IS THIS struggle that reveals the fundamental weakness as well as strength of Bolshevism. It reveals, in short, that the Russians are dutiful patriots —but unwilling slaves.

Obviously aware of this, the Kremlin is directing a great deal of energy toward enrolling so-called "non-party activists" into party organizations, granting them membership without demanding probational waiting.

This means, according to European exiles familiar with Soviet tactics, that Moscow is again marshaling "political zealots" to shore up Bolshevik totalitarianism.

Eardrums Are First Casualty in 'Blast'

LOS ANGELES (AP).—Increased air pressure or "blast" has long been known to kill and injure people in an explosion. Now the University of California is trying to find out just how much pressure does what damage.

Dr. Benedict Cassen is working with rats and mice in a tube in which pulses of air pressure can be developed. He says first damage is bursting of eardrums. Next comes lung hemorrhages, then other internal hemorrhages. He says more work is needed before his data can be adapted for human use.

Six in Ten Expect World War by '56

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE PUBLIC takes a gloomy view of the chances for world peace.

Even before it became plain that Chinese Communist soldiers are fighting in Korea, nearly six out of every 10 persons questioned in a national survey said they believe the United States will find itself in another world war within five years. Three out of every 10 see war in one year.

War fears are found not only in the United States but in many European countries. Recent surveys in England and Holland show that more than six out of 10 believe another war is likely. In Sweden, four out of 10 persons questioned in August thought World War III would be here within five years.

Here is the vote in the American survey completed the last week in October. For comparison, the results of a similar survey last May are also shown.

"Do you think the United States will find itself in another world war within, say, the next year? If 'No,' how about within the next five years?"

A Policewoman Has to Be Versatile

By Harry N. Stull

THE WORK of the Women's Bureau of the Police Department, though little publicized, is extremely important to the welfare of the city. With a personnel of 27 under the command of Capt. Rhoda Milliken, it has a multiplicity of duties.

STULL

One detail combats shoplifting in Washington's business establishments. There are policewomen in Union Station observing train arrivals; they assist confused women passengers as well as watch for mentally deficient persons who come here to "advise" Government officials.

The bureau's duties extend to the supervision of seers and fortune tellers. Policewomen frequently are called upon to help evicted families, especially those with small children. Other duties include the supervision of movie theaters to deal with mashers.

The Women's Bureau, with its limited staff, is unable to do more than investigate the many complaints about the fast growing influx of indecent printed matter available to children. From past experience, however, there is reason to believe that the merchants, who in most cases are ignorant of the character of these books, will cooperate when their attention is called to offensive publications.

THE SUBJECT most discussed among civic groups at the present time is civilian defense, and especially the warden service, to which these organizations are expected to make a large contribution. The training program for this service has already begun and it will expand as those who "graduate" in turn will train others in the new first aid course, which has been modernized in line with the techniques of present day warfare.

It is planned to have qualified instructors in every area of the city to train the great number of volunteers who will make up the warden service.

Preliminary meetings will be held in the six divisions of the city next Saturday to suggest area boundaries and name qualified supervisors.

Civil defense leaders are acutely aware that they must overcome the usual apathy of the citizenry. It is unfortunately true that many persons do not realize the seriousness of the situation, though the day-by-day reports on international affairs give no reason for optimism.

THE PEOPLE who live in the 48 States, in addition to electing their governing officials, last week had the opportunity to determine by referendum the desirability of certain proposed laws and ordinances. This right is the basis of our form of Government and the exercise of it is very important in the lives of those who are fully Americanized.

To the residents of the District, the right of self-determination in any form is probably a far-away dream. The people's right to decide whether certain building, zoning or liquor ordinances should be put in effect, whether bonds for certain purposes should be issued, is so fundamentally American that it is strange it has not been accorded to District residents, aside from the question of general suffrage.

SHADES of Diogenes! At the last meeting of the Federation of Citizens Associations, a taxi driver left his cab, went to the fifth floor of the District Building and announced that he was looking for the person who gave him a $5 bill by mistake for a one. The proceedings were interrupted, he found the person he sought, returned the money and left the meeting before his name could be obtained; the delegates cheered lustily.

Virginia Affairs

Readin', Ritin' and Lipstick Application

By Benjamin Muse

NOW that the immediate school bond referendums have been decided—in the negative—school bond advocates like the writer might be allowed to unburden themselves of a few frank remarks about school administration in Virginia.

MUSE

For one thing, school authorities everywhere seem to feel that they have to build either streamlined palaces or no schools at all. The difference between a modest school building and a de luxe one nowadays, as in the case of used cars, is only a question of age. Every new school building has all the frills. Of course, we want our children to have the best we can afford, but, in the opinion of some of us bystanders, it might be better to build schools more on the utilitarian and economical side and have enough to go around.

The Little Red School House, with a wood-burning stove and water from the well, turned out some pretty fine scholars in its day.

As for what goes on inside the schools, Governor Battle has done nothing finer in his 10 months in office than his courageous insistence on the teaching of fundamentals.

In his speech to the Virginia Education Association the other day, the Governor observed that "some so-called authorities on the subject of education tell us that the average citizen is in no position to answer these questions." "I freely admit," Battle said, "that I am in the same position as the average taxpayer in Virginia." But he went on and said a mouthful.

AS THIS COLUMN has repeatedly pointed out, the school authorities are getting further and further away from the thinking of the taxpayers in their theories on education.

Every few years the General Assembly sends a commission around to contact the public and in every case the commission has returned with a report that the people want more teaching of the "three R's" and the fundamentals. But the public school hierarchy goes on devising new methods of bypassing the fundamentals in favor of vague and impractical formulas for purifying and ennobling youth.

"In my opinion," the Governor told Virginia educators, "there should be no room for argument as far as spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar and civil government are concerned, especially in these trying days when the principles of government which we hold so dear are so widely attacked and misrepresented . . ."

But he added: "It is useless to talk of these things unless our young people are fully equipped to read, write and transmit their thoughts to others . . . There may be a 'rich offering' in many subjects which is totally ineffective without a thorough grounding in the basic skills of learning."

"In this modern age," said the Governor, "I feel that some of us are inclined to treat the schools as a convenient nursery and infirmary . . ." Certainly the schools are reaching out to become that.

THE WRITER has a 12-year-old daughter. Like many Virginia parents, he would like to have her draw the maximum from the storehouse of human knowledge in the hours which she spends in school. She came home the other day with a report that she had been receiving instruction in the application of lipstick! Believe it or not, that is one of the "rich offerings."

There are many other things that children might be taught, if it comes to that. Table manners, for instance, although school authorities might differ on some controversial points like the question of whether to cut lettuce with a knife and fork and what to do with prune seeds. The "personal grooming" course might be extended to boys, some of whom are none too proficient in combing their hair. Instruction in tying a bow tie would offer a real challenge.

But we old-fashioned folks can't get the idea out of our heads that some of these things can be learned at home, and that the precious hours of school are all too little time in which to learn reading, writing and arithmetic and the great lessons which are written in books. We need fewer mentality tests and more of the wisdom of the ages.

Of course, like Governor Battle, I'm just a taxpayer, but we cow hands have an idea or two which even school authorities might pause and consider.

Maryland Affairs

Fitting in a Seventh Congressman

By James P. Connolly

SOMEWHAT LOST from attention in the interest and excitement over the general election and its results, was the news that preceded it by a few days—that Maryland is entitled, on the basis of final official figures of the 1950 census—to an additional or seventh member of the House of Representatives—unless the total membership of the House should be changed.

CONNOLLY

A change in the size of the House might make it a different matter, and some change is considered certain if Alaska and Hawaii are admitted to statehood, a possibility that is expected to come up for consideration at the coming session of Congress.

If Maryland should gain a new member of the House, however, it might either elect a Representative-at-large, as some other States now do, or it might create a seventh congressional district. In either case, the choice would be determined by the State Legislature, which would also redistrict the State if another district should be decided on.

The one district most likely to be divided, if any is, is the Second, the third largest congressional district in the country in point of population, covering Baltimore, Harford and Carroll Counties and a belt extending around three sides of Baltimore County prior to its annexation by the municipality about 30 years ago.

Another section that might be redistricted is the populous area around Washington, now part of the Fifth and Sixth Districts.

IN PAST DISCUSSIONS of redistricting, there was talk of creating a new district combining some of the counties of southern Maryland and the lower Eastern Shore. The consideration was generally unfavorable, because the opposite sides of the bay are separate and distinct in character as well as location, and merging them would hardly make for homogeneity. Since nothing ever was done about it, anyway, the discussion was academic.

So far as homogeneity is concerned, it might best be achieved by absorbing that part of the Second District lying in Baltimore City into the two city districts, the Third and the Fourth. Incidentally, it is a little known fact that part of the Fifth District, comprising Anne Arundel, Calvert, Charles, Howard, Prince Georges and St. Mary's counties, also lies in Baltimore City—on the south side.

A further argument for absorbing the urban part of the Second District into the two city districts is the fact that Baltimore County, with a population of approximately 280,000, most of it in the metropolitan area, is now practically a city in itself.

Still another argument is that, while a majority of the Second District's population is in the belt in Baltimore City, in congressional primaries the county vote is usually controlling because it is more unified. The city part of the district's population is usually split in factional fights, and about the only time the district nominates or elects a city man is when the reverse is true and the counties are at odds.

MARYLAND'S NEW 1950 population figure, on which the possibility of a seventh member of the House of Representatives is based, is 2,322,657, a gain of 521,757 over the 1940 count. The increase in population is reflected in the State's higher registration. A total of approximately 930,000 was eligible to take part in last Tuesday's election.

The figure is the highest that has ever been on the registration books in the State. The division, as between parties, is roughly 655,000 Democrats, 255,000 Republicans and about 20,000 independents or members of the minority parties. And, although the results of Tuesday's election hardly show it, the Democrats have made the largest gains since 1946—in registration. Their increase was more than 50,000, whereas the Republicans lost only about 9000.

The biggest gains in registration in the last four years have been in Baltimore, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties—the three big metropolitan subdivisions.

To get back to the possibility of an additional Congressman for Maryland, congressional seats are allotted by dividing the national population by 435, the present membership of the House. The total population of the country is 150,500,000, about 19,000,000 more than the 1940 figure. As the division has worked out in the past, the States were allotted one Representative for every 350,000 population or each fraction thereof over half.

Volume 2 of 'Papers' Illuminates Fruitful Jefferson 'Retirement'

By J. R. Wiggins

THE PAPERS OF THOMAS JEFFERSON: Volume 2; 1777 to 1779. Julian P. Boyd, Editor; Lyman H. Butterfield and Mina R. Bryan, Associate Editors. Princeton University Press. 664 pp. $10.

THE SECOND VOLUME of the great 52-volume work that is now proceeding at Princeton University, presents the papers of Thomas Jefferson for the fruitful years between his retirement from Congress and his selection as the second Governor of Virginia.

It maintains the high standards of scholarship and editorial direction set by Volume 1, and supports the belief previously inspired that this project is indeed one of the greatest endeavors in historical research undertaken in the Nation's history.

Even those who have made themselves familiar with Jefferson's writings through the earlier published editions of his works, the Randall biography and more recent "lives" of Jefferson, will find Volume 2 filled with delightful surprises and discoveries.

The extraordinary treatment of the Revisal of the Laws makes this volume particularly notable. The editors have not been content with compiling the first complete publication of the bills of revisal extant. They have ornamented this unprecedented collection with a most illuminating treatment of the revisal struggle and with notes that place each proposed law in perspective and greatly gratify curiousity by disclosing what happened to the proposal eventually.

IN DELINEATING so carefully the story of the revisal of the laws, the authors depart from a strictly chronological treatment of the Jefferson papers on which they initially decided. The revisal effort, running from 1776 to 1786, could hardly be handled otherwise.

It represented, as the authors point out, not just the compilation of the statutes existing (which is the undertaking we have come to regard as a "revisal"), but constituted new legislative enactment. The 126 bills proposed by the committee Jefferson headed constituted a broad legislative foundation, republican in principle, for the State of Virginia.

It is time that these proposals had the comprehensive treatment given them by Mr. Boyd and his associates. The years between Jefferson's return from Congress and his governorship can now be better understood, their genuine fruitfulness more widely appreciated.

If Jefferson had any doubts about the wisdom of the course that led him to quit Congress for the legislative chores of his State, some of the reports he got from Congress must have helped persuade him that he was well employed. Some of the letters from his friends in Congress emphasize the wisdom of the editors in including in their work not only letters Jefferson wrote, but letters others wrote to him.

THE CONGRESS of 1777 must have had a reputation as low with some of its members as that of the Eighty-first Congress with President Truman.

John Harvie wrote: "I have not yet had a very clear distinct View of Congress but have seen and heard enough to Convince me that it is not that Wise Systematic decent Assembly that you knew it two years ago . . . I fervently hope the next Choice of Delegates for our State will be Confind to men of extensive political knowledge, Steady and Spiritted in their Rights with Capacity Sufficient to penetrate the designs of every Corner of the Continent. Rely on it, our Confederacy is not founded on Brotherly Love and Able Statesmen are surely wanting here."

Cyrus Griffin, writing on October 6, 1778, was no more favorably impressed. He wrote:

"Congress exhibit not more than two or three members actuated by patriotism . . . perhaps in a little time I shall think myself obligated to quit Congress; I will not sit in a house whose proceedings I cannot assent to with honor, nor is it in my abilities to oppose them with success. I value most what our politicians value least. Congress are at present a Government of Men. It would astonish you to think how all affairs proceed upon the interested principle; Members prostituting their votes in expectation of mutual assistance upon favorite Points."

JEFFERSON got much blame for his views on establishmentarianism. It is interesting to find that the abolition of an established church was followed by his efforts in his own community to support, by voluntary subscription, a pastor and clerk.

Jefferson's first letter to John Adams (May 16, 1777) is interesting present-day reading. It related to the proposed "draught from the military." TJ was against it. "Our people," he wrote, "even under the monarchical government had learnt to consider it as the last of all oppressions."

A letter John Adams wrote to Jefferson on May 26, 1777, also has a quite contemporary ring: "The worst Enemy, we have now is Poverty, real Poverty in the Shape of exuberant Wealth. Pray come and help Us, to raise the Value of our Money, and lower the prices of Things. Without this, We cannot carry on the War. With it, we can make it a Diversion."

Samuel Stanhope Smith, a Presbyterian divine, wrote Jefferson in 1779 that the Virginian's elaborate scheme for a system of education would encounter difficulties as the result of "the variety of religious sentiments that exist in the State." "The expense that will unavoidably attend it," he said, "ought not to create the least difficulty in the breast of a wise legislator. It is applying money to its most valuable and important use."

But he foresaw "the opposition of parties" as a barrier of a different and more formidable kind. "The partialities of sects," he wrote, "ought to have no place in a system of liberal education. They are the disgrace of science and would to Heaven it were possible utterly to banish them from the society of men." But he warned that the Presbyterians would be fearful that the Episcopalians, by no means reconciled to disestablishment, would too much control the schools.

DR. SMITH dwelt at length on the opposition he expected would develop among the Presbyterians, finally exclaiming: "Good God! What suspicions, what animosities divide the disciples of a religion whose ruling maxim is charity and love!" The only way the system could be put into effect, he thought, would be through a union of the two foremost sects—the Presbyterians and Episcopalians.

In 1779, Dr. Smith wrote again, to make it clear to Jefferson that he would try to win others to the plan, even though it be thought unfavorable to the Presbyterians. "For it is better," he concluded, "that one sect should suffer a little than that the general interests of learning should be injured."

Edmund Pendelton, in another 1779 letter, warned Jefferson that "the Rockbridge Deputies want to be Satisfied that your Bill encourages a Presbyterian, and not a liberal Education."

The most famous of the Revisal measures, of course, is the bill to establish religious freedom, brought forward with other bills in 1779, when it failed of passage, but finally approved in 1785. Editors of the papers have painstakingly traced the measure from its proposed to its enacted form and have disclosed the discrepancies between the law approved and the copies widely circulated as authentic but in fact inaccurate. Almost as well known as the Declaration of Independence are these sentences from Bill 82:

". . . it is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order; and finally, that truth is great and will prevail if left to herself; that she is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate; errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them."

Terms of Bill 88, "To Prevent Gaming," suggest that gambling must have been a problem as serious as the Kefauver committee is finding it today. The Jeffersonian bill voided notes for gambling debts, laid fines on gambling gains (of more than five pounds) in either private or public places, made those who bet at cards, racefields or "other places of public resort" into "infamous gamblers" who "shall not be eligible to any office of trust or honor within this State." It also outlawed lotteries.

A PUZZLING anachronism of the forward looking work of the Committee on Revisal of the Laws is the "Bill for Proportioning Crimes and Punishments in Cases Heretofore Capital." Like so many of these papers, this bill itself is an illuminating text on the social conditions of the time.

The surprisingly contemporary quality of the problems and issues with which Thomas Jefferson dealt as a practical legislator will impress the reader of this excellent compilation of his papers. These papers are not just history. The great authors of these letters and papers, Jefferson and his contemporaries, addressed themselves to things universal in time and in space. No one dealing with the political and social problems of our own time will turn from these papers unrewarded.

Along with students of history, those whose practical concern is with today's problems will be grateful to Dr. Boyd and his associates for illuminating, by their research, a period of American history richest in its instruction to those who are making today's history.

Fair to Both Sides

Hundreds of Eyes Give A Closeup of Civil War

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY, The Story of the Civil War as Told by Participants. Edited by Henry Steele Commager. Bobbs-Merrill. 2 vols. 1201 pp. Ill. $12.

"THERE WAS no placidity today"—as the shooting war began at Fort Sumter in Charleston harbor—"with cannon bursting and Allen on the island. No sleep for anybody last night. The streets were alive with soldiers, men shouting, marching, singing."

"Sergeant Hart, who had held up the flag when its staff was shot through in the first attack, came forward quietly and drew the selfsame flag out of an ordinary leather mail bag."—It was Sumter again, four years to the day later.—"We all held our breath for a second, and then we gave a queer cry, between a cheer and a yell; nobody started and nobody led it; I never heard anything like it before or since, but I can hear it now."

Between the day the South shot down the flag at Sumter and the day the North ran up the same torn flag again, America fought the most-talked-about war in its history. Men can hear it now.

IN PROLIFIC Henry Steele Commager's "The Blue and the Gray," men can hear it as it was heard at the time. They can hear it again from both sides in Commager's fair-minded, exhaustive roundup of quotations from several hundred sources, and the first telling has lost none of its power.

The reader can feel the contempt of William Howard Russell, the London Times correspondent, for the panicked Federal army as he was caught in its midst after the First Battle of Bull Run. One can stand alongside Major Rufus Dawes of the Sixth Wisconsin, at the foot of a hill along the Antietam, as he "took the blue color of the State of Wisconsin, and waving it called a rally of Wisconsin men," all those, that is, not already dead in the cornfield.

One can hear the 40-minute cannonade, then the awesome silence as Pickett's charge at Gettysburg began, and see the colors of 47 Confederate regiments sweep up Cemetery Ridge to disaster—and remember the general so reluctant to give the order that he could not bring himself to speak it.

NOT ALL of Commager's anthology is battle action, however. There is a chapter devoted to the political prelude to the war, others on the everyday life of the soldiers on the eastern and western fronts and the songs they sang, the problems of discipline, the naval war, Great Britain and the war, prisons, medical care, and life behind the lines.

Ending it all is James Russell Lowell's ode for a Harvard College service in 1865 to commemorate its war dead—"Bow down, dear Land, for thou hast found release!"

The editing of this material represents a tremendous job. Some of the incidents are even yet in dispute, as Commager notes. In attempting to straddle such issues, as an editor of a work of this magnitude almost has to do, the result is an occasional prefatory note that is ambiguous.

ACCOMPANYING the text are a dozen maps and nearly 30 contemporary pictures. The illustrations have not been too wisely edited; there is sometimes a loss of effectiveness in attempting to reproduce a whole picture, and at such times it would have been better to have used the device of reproducing a detail or choosing another picture.

This is a minor matter, however, considering Commager's massive text, useful bibliography and magnificent summation of the war in the introduction, and Douglas Southall Freeman's fine foreword.

A book that can be read consistently through, or read haphazardly, "The Blue and the Gray" will give pleasure for a long time to come.

For the Tough-Minded

A Realist Blueprints 'One World'

By Sterling North

CHALLENGE AND DECISION. By Edgar Ansel Mowrer. McGraw-Hill. 291 pp. $3.75.

THE WAR in Korea proves, as no amount of argument possibly could, that Communist aggression can be halted, at least temporarily, by a coalition determined to keep the peace.

That our present coalition is not strong enough, all-inclusive enough or permanent enough to insure complete security, is one of the reasons which impelled Edgar Ansel Mowrer to write this closely-reasoned argument for world federation.

Ed Mowrer is no Johnny-come-lately to the international scene. He has won the Pulitzer Prize for his overseas correspondence. For 36 years he has been covering the trouble spots on this planet and calling the turn on forthcoming events with astonishing accuracy.

From the vantage point of the Berlin bureau of the Chicago Daily News in 1932, he wrote not only the first but one of the best of the books showing that Hitler and National Socialism meant world war.

He has been equally perceptive and equally early in showing that Stalin and Communism mean world conquest.

SAYS MOWRER: "The chips are down. World anarchy is becoming intolerable. A new war even for the purpose of preserving freedom can be catastrophic. Containing Russia without war is already whittling freedom away. It will not solve our problems. For it is not only the (Communist) expansionist bloc, with its hateful philosophy and brutal conduct, that threatens the human race. It is an obsolescent political system. What, then, are peoples tired of perpetual strife to do—if not unite? . . . Once we view the present crisis as an opportunity and not a misfortune, we shall, in the very midst of our gigantic effort, somehow relax and live again."

What is the "great something," the new crusade which conceivably could give the world decades if not centuries of peace? It is the acceptance of the fact that, with narrowing distances and increasing interdependency, we have no choice—this must be one world or none.

Mowrer is no dreamy-eyed idealist believing that Russia can easily or rapidly be drawn into a federated world. He realizes that the Kremlin must be outsmarted, outmaneuvered and probably out-armed before the power-mad clique in the Politburo can be whipped into some semblance of sanity.

In Mowrer's estimation, this can only be done by assembling within the framework of the United Nations the largest, toughest and most determined counter-bloc possible to confront the USSR with our own steel wall of defiant resistance.

WE MAY HAVE to do business with such repulsive leaders as Tito, Franco and Peron. After all, as Mowrer rightly points out, we made a bosom pal of Stalin, one of the world's outstanding mass murderers, in order to whip the Axis.

The true democracies, which contain less than one-third of the people of the globe, are not enough. If we leave outside our bloc most of Africa and Asia, those backward regions will gravitate toward communism—a form of government far easier to install than true democracy.

No, our peace coalition (which within a few years must, in Mowrer's opinion, become a limited federation) should seek to take in all nonaggressive powers, showing great tolerance toward the internal political systems of those powers. And it should leave the door open even for Russia, which at the last moment, perhaps out of nothing but fear, may feel impelled to join.

MOWRER does not demand the impossible. The main object of the federation is to enforce peace through law, not merge the economies or the cultures of the various nations. But Mowrer does believe that we must also hold out hope for higher standards of living to every human being on the globe.

He knows that we cannot buy peace or even gratitude. But we can help to engineer and finance the world-wide technological revolution which will mitigate the misery and despair of mankind — the discontent on which this, their Stalin, feeds and waxes strong.

Federation, as Mowrer pictures it, is not the illusion of the tender-minded, but the careful plan of the toughest of tough-minded. Like all politics, it is power politics. But led by the United States, it has at least the chance of eventually becoming world democracy.

THAT FEDERATION by itself does not settle all problems, Mowrer readily admits. The planet will still heave and sway under violent controversies. There will be some danger (unless we carefully devise the world constitution) of Praetorian or Bonapartist seizure of world power.

But faced with the far greater probability of a third world war and atomic desolation of most of the globe, federation becomes as imperative to the entire world as it was to the struggling and weak American confederation of 13 States. What federation did for us, it can do for the world.

No American citizen interested in survival should fail to read this book.

A Bookshelf for the Toddler or the Teen-Ager

ALL KINDS OF TIME. By Harry Behn. Illustrated by the author. Harcourt, Brace. $2. 5 and up.

WHAT is Time to a child? This book is an attempt to put into pictures and words a concept of such intangible things as hours, seasons and forever.

The rhythmic text represents a 5-year-old's explanation of the meaning of time: seconds are bugs; minutes are children; weeks are Sunday School, and birthdays are fenceposts. The many colorful and simple illustrations by the author are an integral part of the text.

There is an especially nice series where a clock, which the 5-year-old has taken apart and attempted to reconstruct, runs away, past the bugs and Sunday School, and even past forever. This book, by the author of the book of poems, "The Little Hill," might help a child grasp some of the mystery about time.

SKIPPER SANDRA. By Dorothy Horton McGee. Dodd, Mead. $2.75. For girls 10 to 14.

AN ADVENTUROUS summer vacation story with a slight and contrived mystery.

An ardent and successful sailor herself, Dorothy McGee writes authoritatively of sailing. Her boats proceed under full sail, but her characters are hopelessly becalmed.

There are some good descriptions of sailing and quite a bit of technical information about the care and sailing of boats that would appeal to youthful navigators.

MAGIC MONEY by Ann Nolan Clark. Illustrated by Leo Politi. Viking Press. $2.50. 121 pp.

THIS IS A STORY of a little boy, his family, his friends and his "wanting secret." All takes place in Costa Rica.

Miss Clark has pictured Tony in a manner that will delight the grownups reading for themselves yet hold the interest of small children being read to.

Tony's "wanting secret" is to earn money so that his beloved grandpapa can have two strong white oxen for his beautifully painted oxcart—once a prize-winner in San Jose cart parades. How the little boy earns the money and discovers that the magic about money is not "buying magic" but "giving magic," makes a charming story.

Leo Politi's colorful illustrations lend an added native touch to this tale of Central America with delightful pictures of Tony's house, the big coffee plantation, and the wonderful market in San Jose.

THE GOLDEN FUNNY BOOK. By Gertrude Crampton. Illustrated by J. P. Miller. A Big Golden Book. Simon and Schuster. $1. 3 to 8.

THERE is a great variety of fun in this book by Gertrude Crampton, who also wrote the Little Golden Books, "Tootle" and "Scuffy the Tugboat." There are funny stories and poems, jokes, scrambled rhymes, mixed up pictures and hidden-picture puzzles, all based on familar stuff for children such as zoo animals and Mother Goose. Mr. Miller's pictures are wonderfully funny, and a vital part of the humor of the book.

LARS AND THE LUCKSTONE. By Faith Yingling Knoop. Illustrated by John Moment. Harcourt, Brace. 182 pp. $2.50.

DRAMATIC black and white drawings illustrate this authentic story of a Lapland family. It is an adventure story, played out against a background of the midnight sun, the Lap villages and the migration as Lar's family follows the reindeer herd to the grazing ground. It is Lars and his intelligent dog, Pehr, who find the last herd led by the great white reindeer.

PETER GRAVES. Written and Illustrated by William Pene du Bois. Viking. 168 pp. $2.50.

THIS is a story that all boys and girls who enjoyed "Twenty-one Balloons" and Robert McCloskey's "Homer Price" will want for a Christmas present. The beauty of the drawings makes it a treasure for art lovers.

Peter Graves, going on 15, was the leader of a gang of boys who stopped at nothing. Prof. Houghton Furlong was an inventor who lived in a house known to the community as "The Horrible House of Houghton." Furlong's experiments brought out the fire department at frequent intervals.

When a wild game of follow the leader took Peter to the door of the professor's house, he learned about the invention which the professor called "furloy." When he inclosed a bit of this metal in a ball, the ball bounced higher than the height from which it was dropped, and kept on bouncing indefinitely.

Peter and the professor proceeded to astonish the magicians of America, then sold furloy to a manufacturer of light luggage for $50,000. The chronicle ends there, but you feel that it was by no means the end of Peter Graves and the professor.

Exquisite drawings of the inventions, lovely pictures of the professor's house and a marvelous portrait of the professor Jacksons' other Giant Golden Books, "Cowboy and Indians" and "Farm Stories," has a highly colorful and humorous picture for every page.

RUNAWAY TOYS. By Inez Hogan. Dutton. $1.75.

A LESSON on why children should put away toys, but maybe not a very convincing one. Told in verse with pictures in two colors. Probably most parents would rather pick up the toys themselves than wade through the sermon.

AVIATION FROM THE GROUND UP. By John F. Floherty. Lippincott. 192 pages, $2.75.

JOHN FLOHERTY'S earlier book, "Aviation from Shop to Sky," was useful and informing to any boy who is interested in the development of airplanes. This is even more so. It is up to date on jet and turbo-jet planes, and it goes into the use of planes in skywriting and in crop spraying. It is too advanced for the younger boys, but it answers almost any question that older boys might ask. Like all Mr. Floherty's books, it is readable and clear in its information.

Jill Owsley, 12-year-old author of "A Handy Guide to Grown-ups," thinks a girl should be allowed to express her personality in the furnishing of her room. This is an illustration from the Random House book.

THE RELUCTANT HEART. By Janet Lambert. Dutton. $2.50.

GOOD conditioning for the soap opera the teen-ager may not be able to escape while doing her ironing or whatever 10 years hence. Penny suffers untold anguish but comes out on top of a career AND children. She holds her husband, too. Maybe, a man who can say comfortingly, "That's just about what life is, darling, a large boiled dinner," is worth it, but their saga seems to add up to a small half-baked hash.

PIRATES, SHIPS AND SAILORS. By Kathryn and Byron Jackson. Illustrated by Gustaf Tenggren. A Giant Golden Book. Simon and Schuster. $2. 4 to 7.

THESE are simple stories of children's adventures in pirate ships, sailboats, lighthouses and other nautical environs, as well as 11 songs and poems. There are no bloodcurdling tales, but some excitement, and several very entertaining old salts. Tenggren, who also illustrated the himself illustrate a story that is as exciting as a science fiction book.

THE KING AND THE NOBLE BLACKSMITH. By Jacob Blanck. Illustrated by Louis Slobodkin. Houghton Mifflin. $2.25. 4 to 8.

DESIGNED to warm the heart of every child who feels "shades of the prison house" closing about him. The little King, annoyed by his busybody councilors who always have other plans for him, is rescued from frustration by the noble blacksmith. Lous Slobodkin's illustrations in color have lots of dash and are lavishly distributed throughout the text.

PLAY WITH TREES. By Millicent E. Selsam. Pictures by Fred F. Scherer. Morrow. 64 pages, $2.

IN AN attractive book with large type and graceful drawings, this author tells the children how to know and appreciate trees. She shows them how to distinguish the seeds, how to plant them so that even city children may have a tiny arboretum. She tells them how the life of a tree is sustained through its leaves and how one can count the age of a tree through the rings in its inner trunk. She shows them how to collect and preserve the leaves and stems and buds.

It is a charming book, both in text and illustrations. It might easily lead the younger boys and girls to a new and interesting hobby.

FARMER IN THE SKY. By Robert A. Heinlein. Scribners. $2.50.

THERE wasn't enough food to go around among earth's fast-multiplying billions in 2000-plus A. D., so Bill and his dad tore up their ration cards and emigrated to one of Jupiter's moons. With them went Dad's new wife and stepdaughter, a girl about Bill's age. On Ganymede they found not only provender, but space enough to farm as their forefathers did in 1950, and to build a house with the forgotten features of windows and a fireplace. Bill is an Eagle Scout, and he takes his merit badge lore with him, but the story never gets sticky. Heinlein, one of science fiction's aces, has worked a lot of scientific truth into this book for older boys—and their dads.

MARTHA OF MOOSEHORN MOUNTAIN. By Agnes Barden Dustin. W. A. Wilde. $2.50.

BOREDOM, loneliness and unceasing toil are not the lot of Martha and her companions, who are engaged in a perpetual round with wild beasts and Indians. They are even relieved of the necessity of dealing with anything so prosaic as parents, neatly disposed of before the story begins. They are surrounded instead with some colorful but unlikely adults who pop up to offer aid at crucial moments, then disappear, leaving these very competent children to manage their own affairs, which, of course, they do very well.

BIJOU, THE LITTLE BEAR. Written and illustrated by Pierre Amiot. Coward-McCann. $1.75. Ages 3 to 7.

BIJOU WANTS to see the circus but is too poor. However, when he finds Annette, a sad little girl with blond curls, who also wants to see the circus but is kept locked in the house by a wicked Madame Octavia, he decides to do something about it.

He searches for his friend Anatole, a kindly and understanding bear, who engineers Annette's escape and an excursion to the circus for all three of them.

How they outwit Madame Octavia and escape in clowns' costumes, produces an exciting tale for the picture-book age as well as some very hilarious, brightly colored drawings done by the author, who knows exactly what he wants the pictures to say.

A Story-Teller's Classic Expanded

LISTEN FOR A LONESOME DRUM, A York State Chronicle. By Carl Carmer. Sloane Associates, 430 pp. Ill. $4.

IN THE 14 years since "Listen For a Lonesome Drum" was first published, it has become something of a classic among readers who relish good tales woven into the texture of existing men, mountains and meadows.

Carmer, whose book has been expanded, and illustrated by John O'Hara Cosgrave II, can take the story of a gang of thieves, or a man who ruined himself compiling and printing a record of the Revolutionary War veterans of his neighborhood, or a bride murdered by her husband, and make it seem as if were only yesterday instead of a century ago.

Typical of Carmer's style is the opening to the tale of the thieving Loomis gang: "George Washington Loomis tried to kiss Rhoda Mallet when she was churning and Rhoda slammed the hell out of him with the plunger. Soon they were married."

There is something of a cold winter's moon, of cider, of side road ambling, in the book, and even the reader with only a lukewarm interest in the lore of New York State will find himself engrossed.—L. G.

Alert Reds Uncover 1907 'Steal'

By Lee Grove

WHERE the Russians are concerned, there is apparently no statute of limitations.

Witness, an article by Nik. Smirnov-Sokoloskii in the Moscow-published Literaturnaia Gazeta of September 26, titled, "The History of a Certain Crime."

The article is an attack on the Library of Congress for having obtained an 80,000-volume library on Russia and Siberia from a Russian national, G. V. Yudin—'way back in 1907.

Yudin was an aging scholar living near Lake Baikal, in the heart of Siberia. Finding no buyer among Russian libraries, in 1904 he wrote the then Librarian of Congress, Herbert Putnam, offering to sell his books to the American national library, since he could not afford to give them, "with the sole idea of establishing closer relations between the two nations."

Putnam, with only 569 Russian books in the library, seized the opportunity. He entrusted negotiations to Alexis V. Babine, a native of Switzerland trained in American universities and libraries, who had gone to Russia to teach. Yudin accepted so little for his books that Putnam always considered them a gift.

Babine then arranged for the shipment of the library—which Lenin had used while an exile in Siberia. It was no small job, as 500 special packing cases were required. In response to an appeal from the American Embassy, the Czarist government saw to it that the shipment had special handling on the Russian railroads.

Babine's connection did not end there. He wrote a sketch of the Yudin books which was published at the time. When the 1917 Russian Revolution broke out, he returned to the United States, and sometime thereafter became chief of the library's Slavic division, presiding over the Yudin books. He died in 1930.

All this, it now turns out, was a crime managed by "American Intelligence."

After having first remarked that "American Intelligence generally works crudely," the Gazeta fumes: "This espionage operation so cleverly managed by the American Intelligence was devoid of all romantic attributes. There were no masks, no revolvers and even no bribes. It had only to capitalize on the unpardonable servility to everything American for which the Czarist officials were noted.

"Everything was done to put into the hands of 'friendly America' the map which she is now utilizing in the preparation to seize the wealth of Russian Siberia for which the Achesons and MacArthurs are sharpening their teeth."

Presumably, the Gazeta is going to find out one of these decades that the Library of Congress has the largest collection of books about Russia outside of Russia, the largest collection of books about China outside of China and the largest collection of maps and charts in the world.

HARNETT T. KANE, whose "Pathway to the Stars" (Doubleday) is doing nicely, was in Washington the other day and paused at the office long enough to say the town is all right, but the coffee—oh my.

Washington coffee just isn't like it is down home in New Orleans, where "good coffee is that in which the spoon stands up straight in the cup. If it tilts a little bit, we throw it in the Mississippi."

Kane, a dark, black-haired sort with cheerful gray eyes behind glasses, has written nine books, all best sellers and all still in print. His first, "Louisiana Hayride," has gone through 14 printings. Currently he is working on a novel about Mrs. Robert E. Lee and is thinking of calling it, "The General's Wife."

He works from "kin see to kain't see"—about 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.—does all his research before writing, and then averages three drafts per book, letting each draft cool before rewriting. "The secret of writing," he believes, "is not what you put in but what you leave out."

Speaking of authorship in Dixie, Kane says, "It used to be said that the South wanted to read every book written; now it looks as if they wanted to write every book written." And of his own work, "I try to strike a mean between the old magnolias and moonlight stuff and the two-headed pig stuff."

ANOTHER New Orleans lad, brilliant photographer Clarence Laughlin of "Ghosts Along the Mississippi" (Scribner's) fame, lectures at the Institute of Contemporary Arts here Tuesday.

BRENTANO'S F st. shop was practically a menagerie the other day when Bill Westley stopped in to autograph copies of his Dutton book, "Chimp on My Shoulder."

Besides the explorer and his wife, Mrs. Leila Roosevelt Westley, there was the chimp, which shook hands with people, a gibbon which pulled interesting books off the shelves, and a fawn-colored Great Dane so big that Brentano's had to collapse the revolving door to let it in.

The Westleys, driving South, were also traveling with a Siamese cat and a turtle, both of which stayed in the car.

POTOMAC EDDIES: Ruth Fox, author of the new Random House book, "Milestones of Medicine," in private life is the wife of Paul Hume, music critic of The Washington Post. She is also the author of "Great Men of Medicine," and under the name "Alexander Irving" of four whodunits . . . The many friends of Washington's round-the-clock notary public, Lydia Mantle Fox, will be interested in her "Eighty Plus," just issued by Christopher Publishing House. It is almost "ninety plus" for Miss Fox now. . . . Public Affairs Press has scheduled for November 26, "Crimes Against International Law," by Brendan F. Brown, dean of Catholic U.'s law school, and Joseph B. Keenan.

A Subdued Biography

Life of H. G. Wells Accents Man Rather Than Writer

By John Barkham

H. G. WELLS: PROPHET OF OUR DAY. By Antonina Vallentin. John Day. 338 pp. $4.

THERE HAS BEEN a minor revival in H. G. Wells in the past year or two, but it has been a cultish, rather than a literary, rebirth. The present vogue in science fiction has sent fans to Wells' early writings in this genre, which would have struck Wells as ironical, since he quickly turned his back on this type of fiction in favor of what he supposed to be a more lasting activity as sociologist, political reformer and popular educator.

Whatever the reason for this renewed interest, it is to be welcomed, for Wells had one of the best organized, most ranging imaginations of our century. His was a vision that could look forward and back, and grasp both panoramas with almost equal facility. As Mme. Vallentin aptly observes, through Wells flowed all those currents of thought upon which our century has been tossed. "He was, indeed, the turntable of our fast-and-faster spinning epoch." Yet it never span so fast that his mind could not outdistance it.

No one can read this biography without experiencing something of that sense of intellecual excitement which comes from a perusal of Wells' best work. The author devotes more attention to Wells the man than to Wells the writer, yet the alert reader who knows his Wells will look in vain here for certain aspects of Wells' personal life that are fairly common knowledge. When a biography of an unconventional celebrity is written only a few years after his death, omissions of this kind are perhaps inevitable.

Wells died just after the end of World War II in a mood of profound gloom that contrasted sharply with his early optimism. "The human story has already come to an end," he wrote; "homo sapiens in his present form is played out." What had played itself out was the most questing mind of its time.

Mme. Vallentin has written a lucid, well-balanced, rather subdued biography. It will serve admirably until such time as the whole soaring story can be freely and fully told.

THE BARONS. By Charles Wertenbaker. Random House. 579 pp. $3.50.

THIS LONG story of a paternalistic dynasty that built up a great powder industry in Delaware is bound to invite comparison with the Duponts, but Mr. Wertenbaker has crammed a good deal more drama and color into his novel than is possessed by the real-life story we know. The action in this book is centered on characters rather than on the company. Mr. Wertenbaker is advancing in stature as a novelist, and this story bears witness to his growing mastery of plot, pace and people.

Air Hostesses Often Find Romance Aloft

By Gay Pauley

NEW YORK (U.P.).—Romance is airborne for many a flight stewardess but strictly grounded for her male counterpart.

Commercial airlines often complain of the loss of their pretty and carefully trained stewardesses, who fall in love with the passengers and marry them.

Stewards are fairly safe from high-flying Cupids. Eastern Air Lines, which employs 420 stewards, said some of its men often dated passengers but it rarely resulted in marriage. About half of the men are husbands but married to girls they met after hours.

Eastern and most other commercial lines have a rule against a stewardess working after wedding bells but the rule doesn't apply to men.

Why don't stewards marry girls they meet on flights? Steward Joseph Carney, good-looking and single, said it was rather hard to explain.

"THE ONES we'd like to know better either already have a guy lined up or are cagey about dating a fellow they just met," he said.

He added, "we get our share of obvious passes, but a fellow has to watch his reputation too."

The line doesn't mind if the steward, or purser as he also is called, makes a date with a passenger, if it's done discreetly.

Eastern boasts of being the only large domestic line with a predominantly male steward staff. It added that the high marriage rate of stewardesses had nothing to do with this policy.

A spokesman explained that men can give better passenger service. People don't mind asking a man for a favor but will hesitate to ask a girl.

Standard-Priced Antifreeze Held Adequate for Most Cars

WILMINGTON, Del. — News which may save money for millions of American automobile owners this winter has come out of DuPont Company research laboratories. It was:

For four out of five cars now on the road, more than adequate cold-weather protection can be provided with standard-priced anti-freeze as opposed to the premium-priced type. The company produces both types and the standard-priced anti-freeze sells for about one-third the price of the premium.

Premium-priced anti-freeze is required only under the following conditions:

1. In those autos in which high-opening thermostats have been installed to get more heat out of heaters.

2. Cars driven in those sections of the country where it gets colder than 30 degrees below zero.

3. Automobiles operated at high altitudes.

These facts were established by the most exhaustive anti-freeze research DuPont ever conducted, starting back in 1933 and covering anti-freezes of all types.

Book About Italy

ITALY, edited by Dore Ogrizek (Whittlesey House; $6).

Another addition to this publisher's "world in color" series, this volume, with its photos, drawings and gay pictures in color, its descriptive maps and its chatty text, has somehow a bit of the thrill of actual travel. You turn a page as you turn a corner, and there's an arch, an opera house, a bridge or something else to see. After introductory sections on art and history, there are chapters on Rome and a dozen provinces. I assume it is translated from the French, but the name of the able translator is not given. W. G. Whistle Stopping

It Ain't Every Day You Get to Vote

By Orval Hopkins

I motored the half-block to the local school this week to exercise the franchise for the first time in 10 years, heaven forgive it (first time in the voting booths, that is; I voted for That Man by absentee ballot during the big war). Another voter, my wife, accompanied me and attempted to give me the word about how to cast my ballot. I silenced her by reminding her about the time she voted for Wendell Willkie.

Inside, we were confronted by two large, sinister-looking objects on wheels. These turn out, of course, to be the voting machines. (Things weren't like this in the old days when I used to vote. You simply went in, became completely confused by the complexity of the ballot, then left hurriedly after a mad, embarrassed whirl of marking X's in spaces.) Well, the man patiently explained the thing to me a number of times and I went in and voted. I fancy I cut quite a figure from the outside, since only my shoes and the bottoms of my trousers shewed (G. B. Shaw for showed).

We greeted a neighbor lady and stepped outside to where she had left her small son, 4, and where we got another lesson about the duplicity to which parents sometimes have to resort to keep the fry in line.

"I couldn't go in there," the boy yipped, "'cause they don't allow gentlemen in there."

Franchise exercised (and boy, did they whack us!).

THE HOTEL Sea Gull in Miami Beach is nearly completed and will open in December, according to a somewhat cryptic note I have here . . . Two reduced-rate holiday cruises, sailing from San Francisco and Los Angeles in late November and December, are being planned by American President Lines for its trans-Pacific liners President Cleveland and President Wilson. The Wilson will sail from San Francisco November 25 and from Los Angeles November 27. The Cleveland sails from "The City" December 20 and from Los Angeles December 22 . . . The Netherlands West Indies tourist committee (475 Fifth Ave.), New York, has published an illustrated booklet on the island of Curacao . . . The season opens on Christmas. The department says that after January 1 "you can go on a 15-day trip to Austria for from $525 to $550, including transatlantic transportation."

BEGINNING Wednesday, British Overseas Airways Corp. will send a twice-a-week flight to Nassau, Bahamas, where the traveler will be able to pickup a connection to Kingston, Jamaica. Total time over-all, 7½ hours. Flights will leave New York Wednesdays and Saturdays at 11 a. m., and returning leave Kingston at 6 a. m. Thursdays and Sundays . . . Stella Polaris Scheduled for Spring Cruise

NEW YORK. — Colin Petch, general passenger agent of the Bergen Steamship Co., Inc., reports that the cruise ship Stella Polaris has been scheduled for a 28-day spring cruise to Europe in 1951. She will sail from New Orleans Saturday, May 26, and arrive in London on June 22, where the cruise terminates.

Sailing the southern Atlantic, the route covers the West Indies, Madeira Islands, North Africa and Spain. The planned itinerary includes eight favorite ports of call: Havana, Cuba; St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; Madeira Islands; Casablanca and Tangier in North Africa; Cadiz, Spain; Lisbon, Portugal; London, England. Rates for this cruise start at $540.

Stella Polaris guests are limited to a company of 170. Staterooms have real beds, and facilities include Verandah Cafe, outdoor tiled swimming pool, valet, barber and beauty shop services.

Petch says: "This Stella Polaris 1951 spring cruise has been scheduled in response to many requests for a repeat performance. Former passengers have told us again and again they found it one of the most enjoyable trips they have ever taken. The timing of this particular cruise is ideally suited for those who plan to travel in Europe during the summer, and wish to combine it with a relaxing ocean voyage."

Sea-Air Accord Reached

A SEA-AIR agreement offering alternate routing by ship or plane for travelers to Bermuda and the West Indies has been signed by the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships and Trans-Canada Air Lines.

The new agreement will permit passengers from any points in Canada and the United States served by the two carriers to travel to the Bahamas, Bermuda, Jamaica, Barbados and Trinidad by sea or air and to return by the alternate transportation service. For instance a traveler from Boston may elect to go to the West Indies in one of the "Lady" liners, and, on the return trip, to fly in a "North Star."

The tariffs under the new plan provide a 10 percent reduction from the normal one-way fare for the sea voyage, and set the air trip at one half the present round trip cost.

The terms of the new sea-air agreement will be available to travelers between Bermuda and Barbados and Trinidad.

Open-Handed Tourist Runs Out of Money

BARCELONA, Spain (AP).—An unidentified foreign tourist walked out of one of Barcelona's cathedrals recently so moved he began passing out 100 peseta ($2.50) notes to everybody who looked in need.

Words spread so fast that within a few minutes the donor was faced with a crowd of several hundred.

After passing out 40 of the notes, the tourist had to retire. He ran out of money.

Tourist Expenditures

The American Express Travel Service reports that for every dollar the average American tourist spends in Canada, 30 cents goes to retail merchants, 22 cents to restaurants, 17 cents to hotels, 12 cents for gasoline, 9 cents for amusements, 7 cents for transportation and 3 cents for incidental expenses.

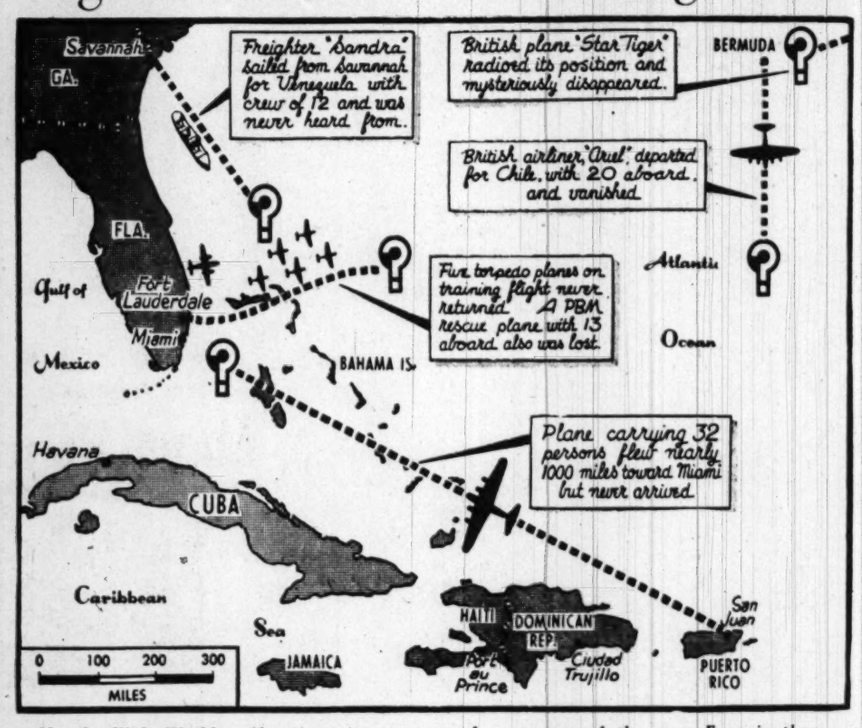
Enigmas Remind Us It's Still a Big World



Map by Wide World staff artist points up a modern mystery of the sea. Even in these push button days, the age of the mechanical mind, no one has been able to fathom the secrets of the Atlantic off the southeastern coast of the U. S., where in the past five years alone ships of sea and air have vanished without trace.

By E. V. W. Jones

MIAMI, Fla. (AP).—It's a small world? No, it's still the same vast globe the ancients knew, with the same misty limbo of the lost.

We think it is small because of speeding wheels and wings and the voice of radio which comes out of the void. A mile is only a minute's travel by wheel or a few seconds' flight—but it is still a mile.

The miles add up to a vast unknown into which a hundred and more persons have flown or sailed within brief memory, to be swallowed up just as ships were swallowed in the old sailing days.

THE SANDRA carried radio. It was a 350-foot freighter which sailed with 12 men on board from Miami to Savannah. There 300 tons of insecticide were loaded for Puerto Cabello, Venezuela. The Sandra sailed—and disappeared without a trace. On June 16, in the "small world" year of 1950, search was abandoned. The fate of the craft and the dozen on board was written down as an official mystery.

Where are the men and women and two babies—32 persons in all—who happily boarded a plane at San Juan, Puerto Rico, and flew 1000 miles toward Miami? A radio message at 4 a. m. December 27, 1948, reported them 50 miles south of their goal. They never arrived. Searchers scanned 310,000 miles of sea and land, but the elusive limbo into which they flew was on no map.

On January 18, 1949, a great task force of the United States Navy was on maneuvers south of Bermuda. That same day a British airliner, the Ariel, vanished in the thin air through which it flew. The plane had left Bermuda with 20 persons on board on its way from London to Chile. The naval force abandoned its maneuvers. Aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers combed the waters with thousands of pairs of sharp eyes on watch. They learned no hint of the Ariel's fate.

A YEAR EARLIER, on January 31, 1948, another British plane, the Star Tiger, approached Bermuda with 29 on board. The craft radioed its position several times. Then silence enveloped it, and mystery. To this day no trace has been uncovered.

An older but more perplexing mystery is that of the five torpedo planes. They took off from the Navy's Fort Lauderdale air station on December 5, 1945, for a navigational training flight. The hours passed and darkness fell. Anxious officers called to them by radio and were answered only with silence.

The hour passed when their fuel would be exhausted and search planes were sent out. Among the searchers was a big, lumbering rescue craft, a PBM with 13 men on board.

None of the five torpedo planes with the 14 crewmen were found despite the greatest search in Florida's history. Nor did the PBM rescue craft ever return.

THESE and other modern mysteries have established a roll of about 135 persons who went forth confidently into a world they thought small.

But it is the same big world the ancients knew into which men and their machines and ships can disappear without a trace.

New Hampshire Has New, Wider Ski Trails

CONCORD, N. H. — Improvements at the popular New Hampshire ski areas this year follow a trend to provide wider, smoother slopes and trails for all classes of skiers, the State Planning and Development Commission reports. A number of new ski trails being constructed at various major ski areas have been reported to the commission.

Most of the ski tow and lift operators have already confirmed their intention to operate during the coming snow season, and it is expected that New Hampshire will have as many "up-ski" devices operating as last year when approximately 100 rope tows were available in addition to the tramway, skimobile, and the chair lifts and Alpine lifts, the commission said.

A new ski area on Red Hill at Moultonboro that will have a 1500-foot Bridger disc lift with a capacity of 600 persons per hour, on a 2000-foot slope, has been announced by O. Rundle Gilbert of Center Sandwich. Construction of expert, intermediate, and novice trails and a base hut with snack bar at the Red Hill Ski Area were reported.

Some of the improvements at the larger ski areas that have already been reported to the commission include:

Aerial Tramway, Cannon Mountain, Franconia — Lower half-mile of Cannon Mountain trail widened to 100 to 125 feet wide, and new half-mile trail "Paulies' Follie," and new experimental by-pass of middle Cannon trail added. Practice slope at base enlarged and another tow added (now three in all).

Skimobile, Cranmore Mountain, North Conway—New half-mile expert trail, "Ledges to South Slope," added and other trails, slopes conditioned.

Belknap Mountains Recreation Area, Gilford—New 1250-foot "Tiger" slope completely resurfaced. New beginners' slopes completed and sections of old trails resurfaced. New cable, motor, gear box and new type of chairs installed on the 3200-foot chair lift. Additional parking space for 300 cars provided.

Mount Sunapee State Park, Mount Sunapee—Lynx ski trail, 4400 feet long, for intermediate skiers, which was under construction last year, being completed. Beck Brook trail (novice) being widened and regraded. A tent, to be used as a warming shelter and coffee house, will be installed at the base of the practice slope. This, of course, is in addition to the modern warming house and snack bar at the base of the chair lift.

Thorn Mountain Ski Area, Jackson—New trail is being cut. Slope to left of the chair lift is being widened considerably.

Black Mountain Ski Area, Jackson—New ski trail, the "Jackson Standard," expert and seven tenths of a mile long, has been added. Time trials will be held on this trail each Thursday during the snow season. The other five trails are being groomed from top to bottom, and a seventh trail, now under construction, may be completed for this winter.

St. John's—City of Firsts

ST. JOHN'S, historic harbor and capital of the island province of Newfoundland, is a city of famous firsts.

Newfoundland became England's first overseas colony when, on August 8, 1583, Sir Humphrey Gilbert landed at St. John's and formally laid claim to the island in the name of Queen Elizabeth.

It was in the Cabot Tower, on St. John's Signal Hill, that Signor Guglielmo Marconi picked up the first wireless signal, the letter 'S,' to be relayed across the Atlantic Ocean. The date was December 12, 1901.

St. John's waved good luck to a twin-engined aircraft which lumbered upward from Lester's Field on June 14, 1919. It was Alcock and Brown taking off in their Vickers-Vimy bi-plane on the first non-stop flight ever made across the Atlantic.

And it was at St. John's, on January 29, 1941, that the troopship 'Edmund B. Alexander' docked with the first contingent of American soldiers to go overseas in World War II.

Blue Moon

"ONCE in a blue moon" means seldom, if ever, but in Jamaica, B.W.I., a beautiful, sapphire-tinted moon is seen rising over the island's Blue Mountains every now and then. This is, of course, the actual moon, colored temporarily by tropical atmospheric conditions in the higher altitudes. Jamaica's Blue Mountains rise to a height of 7402 feet.

Fishing Top Miami Sport

MIAMI, Fla.—Fishing is the top-ranking sport in popularity in Miami, both with residents and visitors, it is shown by a recent survey conducted by the city's research bureau.

About eight out of 10 persons queried during the survey placed angling at the top of their sports and recreational activities.

A good reason for this may be the wide scope allowed fishermen. There are hundreds of varieties of fish in Bascayne Bay and they may be taken from shore, from bridges or from boats.

From the many fresh water and brackish water streams and lakes in the area, bass, bream, perch, catfish and gar may be taken, and snook and tarpon may be found along with the freshwater fish.

For 120 days the Metropolitan Miami Fishing Tournament is in progress. Records show that more than 600,000 persons participate and world records are usually broken. Tournament winners are awarded valuable prizes for outstanding catches.

The Gulf Stream, only a mile off the Miami shoreline, provides plenty of piscatorial education for anglers. Fishermen are taken to the fishing grounds daily by the charter sports fishing fleet, said to be the largest in the world.

BOB SHEMONSKI GOES AROUND END FOR MARYLAND'S TOUCHDOWN IN YESTERDAY'S 7-7 GAME WITH NORTH CAROLINA AT CHAPEL HILL

Carolina's Long March Earns Draw in 4th Period

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Nov. 11. After 60 minutes of fiendish football, Maryland and North Carolina ended their bruising Armistice Day battle exactly as it started—all even.

The favored Terrapins produced a touchdown in the second quarter and the rugged Tar Heels roared 80 yards for a score in the final period to fashion the 7-7 stalemate which left most of the rain-soaked, freezing 32,000 spectators highly pleased over the turn of events.

Bob Shemonski hung up Maryland's only score, capping a 31-yard drive with a 4-yard encirclement of right end, while Sophomore Halfback Bud Wallace rammed over tackle for the North Carolina marker in the fourth period.

Bob Dean, who missed a 22-yard field goal in the last five seconds of the savage defensive struggle, converted after Shemonski's touchdown and Fred Sherman kicked the extra point after the Tar Heel score.

The Terps were a one-touchdown favorite to end a 24-year losing streak against the Tar Heels, which had seen the blue clads win nine straight during that span.

Maryland, which now has a record of five victories, two defeats and a tie for the season, made a last-minute move to unravel the knot.

Principally on the passing of Quarterbacks Bob DeStefano and Frank Armsworth, who was rushed

SMU Loses; Texas Defeats Baylor

Texas Aggies Win, 25 to 20

DALLAS, Nov. 11 (AP).—Texas A. and M.'s grinding ground game, with the great Bob Smith pounding a thunderous rhythm, beat Southern Methodist into the Cotton Bowl turf, 25-20, today and kept the Aggies in the battle for the Southwest Conference football championship.

Twice the mighty fullback of the Cadets got loose on glittering runs, one for 74 yards and another — the game's clincher — for 72, and the Aggies shot down a Southern Methodist team that tried everything and failed.

The result knocked SMU out of the championship running and, in all likelihood, out of a bowl game. It shot the Aggies into second place in the Conference campaign and, if they beat Rice next week, will come up to the annual Thanksgiving Day traditional game with Texas with a great chance at the title.

Texas' win over Baylor, 27-20, today kept that team in first place in the Conference. All others, except A. and M., which has lost one game, have been eliminated.

The last quarter of today's battle had a crowd of 75,457 in an uproar. Fireman Fred Benners, the mighty SMU bomber, almost passed the Methodists to victory.

SMU partisans thought they had the game in the bag when with less than 5 minutes to go Benners threw a 55-yarder to Benny White on the Aggie 5 and the big Methodist wingman trotted over.

But Smith was to be heard from. The Aggies got the kickoff on their 28 and on the first play the smashing, writhing Aggie fullback broke over right tackle and dashed like a locomotive to the Methodist goal.

Smith gained the astounding total of 297 yards running with the ball and it was on 29 tries—more than 10 yards average.

School Gives Up Football, Says Draft Too Uncertain

ONEONTA, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—Hartwick College has played its last football game—for a few years, at least.

The board of trustees said that the draft of men for the armed forces made manpower uncertain and "the expense involved in maintaining adequately a squad of qualified football player is out of the question during the years immediately ahead." Hartwick won two and lost five games this season.

Redskins Play Eagles

It's the Redskins vs. the Eagles at Griffith Stadium today with no change likely in the Philadelphia story.

Coach Greasy Neale's Eagles are 13-point favorites to run their personal winning streak over the hapless locals to eight in a row and at the same time extend the Redskins' overall losing streak to seven straight.

With 3500 or more North Carolinians coming up to see their idol, Choo-Choo Justice, there'll be 30,000 in the stands for the 2 p. m. game.

Not since 1946 when Quarterback Jimmy Youell led them to a 27-10 victory in Philadelphia have the Redskins beaten the Eagles. They've come close on several occasions, but that's all.

Today doesn't appear to be the

Ohio State Wins; Illini Beat Iowa

First-Period Surge Beats Hawkeyes, 21-7

IOWA CITY, Iowa, Nov. 11 (AP). Illinois fanned its Rose Bowl hopes today with a 21-7 victory over a stubborn Iowa football team that refused to fold after giving up three first quarter touchdowns.

Illinois, however, still faces the tremendous task of stopping Ohio State and Northwestern if the Illini are to be sure of a trip to the Rose Bowl.

The Illini, exceptionally fast and fronted with a sharp-charging line, struck with devastating fury at the start. They racked up three touchdowns in 9½ minutes and the chilly Dad's Day crowd of 45,104 fans nursed thoughts of a rout similar to Ohio State's 83-21 rip-up of Iowa.

Al Brosky, a sophomore, touched off the Illinois scoring on a sizzling 61-yard punt return.

Next came 32-yard run by Dick Raklovits after taking a flat pass from Fred Major. Raklovits followed with a 60-yard scoring dash.

Big Bill Reichardt led the Badger Gambles Backfire, 19-14

By Fritz Howell

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 11 (AP).—Wisconsin's gambling badgers slowed Ohio State's vaunted offense down to a walk today, but the brilliant Bucks pulled out a 19-14 victory before 81,535 fans to practically clinch the Western Conference championship.

A victory over either Illinois or Michigan in remaining games would give the undisputed title to Ohio State.

The underdog Badgers gambled twice today, lost both times, and the gambles cost them the contest. The first gamble came in the third period with Wisconsin leading 7-6. The Badgers stopped a 52-yard Ohio drive on the 1-foot line, taking the ball on downs, and tried two plunges at the line, which failed to gain an inch.

Each time the ballcarrier was almost nabbed in the end zone for a safety. The Badgers gambled on a quick-kick on third down, the ball going out of bounds on Ohio's 28. Walt Klevay plunged for six and then Tony Curcillo, Ohio quarterback, hit End Ralph Armstrong on the goal line with a 22-yard touchdown pass.

Early in the fourth session, Wisconsin gambled again, trying to make half a yard on fourth down on its own 22-yard line. The play missed by inches. Ohio took over and moved the 22 yards in five plays with Halfback Vic Janowicz skirting right end for the touchdown which won the contest.

Late in the period, the Badgers zoomed down to Ohio's 14-yard line on the sensational passing of Quarterback John Coatta, but Ray Hamilton of Ohio intercepted on Ohol's 4 to stop the threat.

Janowicz fumbled on the next play, however, and Ed Withers recovered on the four for Wisconsin.

Jimmy Hammond, Wisconsin fullback, plunged a yard on second down for the touchdown to bring the Badgers up to a 19-14 deficit, with about 3½ minutes to go. But Ohio ran the time out with ground plays after taking the kickoff.

Wisconsin, unimpressed by Ohio's great 43-point per game scoring average, and by the supposedly invulnerable Buckeye forward wall, dominated the opening

St. Lawrence Ends First Perfect Season in 50 Years

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—St. Lawrence University's football team kept its 1950 unbeaten-untied record clean today by defeating the University of Rochester, 21-19, in its final game of the season The game closed St. Lawrence's season—its first perfect campaign in 50 years of football.

George Miller's magic toe accounted for the St. Lawrence win.

California Routs UCLA

BERKELEY, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP). California's devasting Bears practically clinched a third consecutive trip to the Rose Bowl today as they routed the University of California at Los Angeles Bruins, 35-0.

A sellout crowd of 81,000 watched the battle.

Only Stanford now stands between the undefeated, untied Bears aand a return to the big bowl.

Lynn (Pappy) Waldorf's hard-hitting club demoralized UCLA with a smashing offense that scored two touchdowns in the second period, two more in the third, and another in the fourth. The Bruins crossed the midfield marker only twice in the bruising contest.

It was the worst defeat ever inflicted by the Bears on the Bruins, and the first time Coach Henry

Dillon's Run Wins, 27-20

WACO, Tex., Nov. 11 (AP).—Slender Bobby Dillon raced 84 yards behind magnificent blocking late in the fourth quarter as the University of Texas kicked Baylor out of the Southwest Conference title chase, 27-20.

Until he snared Larry Isbell's punt on his own 16-yard line, took a choice of a wave of massive blockers and fled down the sidelines, it was anybody's ball game.

But this broke the 20-20 deadlock and shattered the spirit that had brought Baylor from behind a stunning disadvantage in the first few minutes of play.

A fumble on the opening kick off by Baylor's fleet Buddy Parker set the stage for a quick Texas tally. The Lonhorns shot ahead again in the second period after Baylor had tied the score, added one more touchdown in the third and then Dillon put over the clincher.

Townsend scored the first Texas touchdown from the 1-yard line but Parker matched his effort less than four minutes later.

Then the Bruising Texas line paid dividends, though Ben Tompkins passed to Tom Stolhandske for 4 yards for the second Longhorn touchdown. The third came on Tompkins' 2-yard quarterback sneak.

Parker snared a 14-yard Isbell pass for Baylor's second touchdown in the third period and hit Harold Riley with a 28-yard pass for the third Bear score in the fourth.

Second Half Surprise

G. W. Springs Running Attack And Throttles Furman, 34-7

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

GREENVILLE, S. C., Nov. 11. George Washington's Colonials, dependent almost completely on Andy Davis' passing during nearly a month of losses, used a surprise running attack to beat Furman, 34-7, here today.

Davis, Bob Cilento, Bino Barreira and Jimmy Kline rolled up 312 yards among them in G. W.'s mightiest ground offensive in four years.

Fullback Cilento, in particular, was responsible for the Colonial victory. The 175-pound Newark junior scored three touchdowns, gained 102 yards in 19 rushes and completed three out of four passes for 27 yards.

Barreira, 155-pound sophomore, alternating with Cilento, ran up 88 yards in 22 land plays and scored a touchdown. Kline, senior wingback, ran 37 yards for a fifth touchdown. He picked up 59 yards altogether in four line cracks.

Despite the lopsided score, G. W. knew it was in a ball game. The plucky Purple Hurricanes knocked a little complacency out of the Colonials in the first half by taking a 7-6 lead.

In the third quarter, the aroused G. W.s put over one touchdown, and whipped across three more in the finale.

That was how G. W. snapped its

FRESNO, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—The powerful Loyola Lions gained their twelfth straight football win as they shut out Fresno State, 28-0, in an Armistice Day contest.

The underdog Fresno squad held the Lions until the last play of the opening quarter, then gave up a touchdown just after the gun sounded on Quarterback Don Klosterman's pass to End Fred Snyder.

Tulane Smothers Navy, 27 to 0, For Middies' Worst Defeat

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 11.—From New Orleans came a vastly under-rated Tulane team today to whack down Navy, 27 to 0, in municipal stadium before 20,000 fans and deal the Midshipmen their worst defeat of the season.

They threw the Nation's biggest line at Navy, plus a set of racy backs, and then riddled the Middies' defenses with sharp passing forays to click off one touchdown in each quarter. It was a Green Wave to leave Navy coaches green with envy.

A couple of guys named Joe—Ernst and Shinn—were the prime movers as Tulane marched 73 yards to its first touchdown and mounted another 68-yard drive for its third. Shinn snared 11 passes thrown by Ernst, the home grown quarterback from New Orleans, and Bill Bonar, Ernst's relief man.

So tightly did the big Tulane line contain Navy's own attack, that not until the closing 30 seconds of the first half could the Middies penetrate beyond their own 38-yard line.

And when the Middies were driven into the air by their futility against Tulane's line, the Greenies made a shambles of Bob Zastrow's passing attempts. He completed only four of the 23 he threw. Additional attempts to throw by Mike Sorrentino and Bob Cam-

Hoyas Lose to Rams, 14-13, As Carra Misses Vital Point

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Georgetown found a new way to lose a ball game here today and left a broken-hearted kid at the Polo Grounds when Fordham staggered to a 14-13 victory.

A crowd of 13,310 watched the Hoyas stun the two-touchdown favored Rams with a dazzling 90-yard march for a touchdown when little more than 3 minutes were left to play.

That set the stage for the heartbreak. Chunky Mike Carra, sophomore guard from Hempstead, Long Island, attempted to boot the tying point and missed with a low kick just to the right of the goal post.

And what was Carra doing in there? Well things are so bad for the injury-riddled Hoys that Dick Haesler, place-kicking specialist with 20 conversions in his last 21 tries, was riding the bench with a bad leg.

After his failure, the dismayed Carra was inconsolable. Little Mike, he's only 5-foot-7 although he weighs 210, just bowed his head and wept. His teammates rushed to cheer him up. It didn't seem to work.

On his first shot in collegiate ball, Carra did kick the point that tied the game at 7-7. Bugs Thompson, Washington's own, gave Carra the opportunity on the first play from scrimmage after intermission.

Thompson, who has been threatening to [illegible] all year, did

Eastern went permanently ahead in the third period on a 4-yard plunge by Ralph Sita, culminating a 72-yard march. Keys converted again, giving the Ramblers a 14-7 advantage after three quarters.

Thirteen points in the fourth quarter removed all doubt of an Eastern win. O'Neill ploughed over from one yard out and Eddie Marr went for 12 through the middle. Keys adding a placement after the Marr tally.

Anacostia Wins, 13 to 6, Stays in Race

Anacostia's Indians kept up with Eastern in the red-hot race for the Group I championship by defeating Wilson, 13-6, yesterday at Eastern, after Eastern had downed Western, 27-7, in the first game of the doubleheader.

Anacostia is a half game behind Eastern, with four victories and a tie, while the Ramblers have five and tied one. The Indians have a game with Western next week, but Eastern has finished its league schedule.

Bob Chatlin, Anacostia's fleet little halfback, scooted 71 yards around his own right end to give the Indians a first-quarter lead. Ed Laso added the extra point.

Wilson narrowed the margin to 7-6 early in the next period when Bob Quinn passed to John Phillips, who caught the pass and went the remaining distance. The play covered 55 yards. Dick Sebastian, with a chance to tie the score, missed on the conversion attempt and Anacostia was still in front, 7-6.

The Indians scored what proved to be the winning touchdown midway in the same period. Dick Grimes set up the decisive tally when he recovered Wayne August's fumble on the Wilson 30.

Irish Win; Williams Sets Records

NOTRE DAME, Ind., Nov. 11 (AP)—Quarterback Bob Williams clicked off two all-time Notre Dame passing records today in hurling the Irish to victory over Pittsburgh's pent-up Panthers 18-7.

Williams took almost personal charge in herding Notre Dame to a two-game winning streak, its longest of the season. Nearly 57,000 teeth-chattering fans huddled in 25-degree weather to watch the Irish close their home season and post a 4-3 won-lost mark.

Williams pitched two touchdown passes in the first half for a 12-0 lead then hooked up in a great aerial clash with Pitt's effective Bob Bestwick in the final half.

In all, Williams completed 13 out of 23 tosses for 162 yards. This performance was sufficient to give him a total of 172 connections in 330 attempts through 17 games of his Irish career for a new school record. Angelo Bertelli's records of 169 hits in 324 tries (made in 26 games) were shattered.

Notre Dame, spotting the Panthers seven points in the third period, hogtied their triumph on an 81-yard surge at the outset of the finale. Williams' passes, and also his running which blossomed when his receivers were covered, welded with Jack Landry's ball carrying, featured the jackpot drive.

Landry capped it with first a 23-yard sprint and finally a two yard smash to a touchdown.

Pittsburgh, in losing its sixth game in seven starts, displayed the most terrific aerial attack the Irish have faced this season. Bestwick was sensational in catapulting 19 strikes in 24 heaves for 252 yards. His No. 1 target, Chris Warriner, gained 123 in eight catches and Nick Derosa made 90 in six. Pitt could muster only 20 net yards rushing to Notre Dame's 212.

The Panthers thrust to the Irish 19-, 5-, and 18-yard lines before they could score. The marker came on Bestwick's 15-yard pitch to Derosa late in the third to cap a 70-yard aerial circus in seven plays. Bestwick hit five-for-five during it.

Williams' 15-yard scoring toss to Jim Mutscheller ended a 70-yard push in the first quarter. His 12-yard touchdown pitch to John Petitbon capped a 40-yard surge after a recovered fumble in the second.

Notre Dame	6	6	0	6	—18
Pittsburgh	0	0	7	0	— 7

Touchdowns—Mutscheller, Petibon, Landry, DeRosa. Conversion—Bolkovac.

Fifth Stringer Supplies Punch To Down Indiana

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 11 (AP). Wes Bradford, a tiny 155-pound sophomore scatback, played hide and seek with Indiana's line today and led Michigan to a solid 20-7 Big Ten victory here.

A crowd of 67,379, smallest home gathering in 15 games, saw the little-known fifth stringer from Troy, Ohio, restore a running punch to the Michigan team that was tied by Minnesota and beaten by Illinois in its last two outings.

Bradford brought the fans to their feet early in the second quarter with a shifty 41-yard touchdown run that gave Michigan a 12-0 lead and provided what proved to be the winning counter. For the rest of the afternoon the pint-sized speedster whipped out consistent gains that kept the Indiana defenses off balance.

End Harry Allis started Michigan off on the right foot. He intercepted Lou d'Achille's pass on the Indiana 33 on the third play of the game and raced all the way to a touchdown.

Don Dufek added the third touchdown on the first running play of the second half. He broke through right tackle and outraced the Indiana secondary 54 yards to the goal.

Indiana's lone counter came on a series of plays. The Hoosiers rolled 65 yards with Halfback Bob Robertson plunging through the middle for the last 4.

Grandelius Stars As Michigan State Routs Gophers, 27-0

EAST LANSING, Mich., Nov. 11 (AP).—Michigan State's smooth-working Spartans tripped, tossed, and twirled their way to a solid 27-0 football victory here today over a stubborn Minnesota eleven.

The Spartans, playing their last home game of the year before a near capacity crowd of 47,461 fans, scored in every quarter. Four backs, led by the sensational Sonny Grandelius, divided the honors.

The Michigan State scorers were Grandelius, quarterback Al Dorow, fullback LeRoy Crane, and right halfback Vince Pisano. Bob Carey, big end, made three of four conversion attempts.

Grandelius, who now has rolled to 950 yards in 144 attempts made his marker from ten yards out. It gave him a season total of 72 points, tying the school record set by George Guerre in 1947.

That touchdown was set up by Jesse Thomas' sparkling 57-yard run from his own 14 to the Minnesota 29. He also started the second score with another 22-yard return.

Dorow went over from the 17 after taking a pass in the left flat from Grandelius. The drive covered 60 yards in 13 plays.

Crane, the leading ground gainer for the day counted from 23 yards out in the third period. A Dorow pass to Bob Carey set up that one.

The last drive saw Pisano go over from the 3, after 17 plays had carried 74 yards.

Michigan State	7	7	7	6	—27

Little Admirals Lose, 14-0

Fork Union Trounces Bullis, Extends Unbeaten String to 18

Fork Union Military Academy of Virginia won its eighth straight game of the season and extended its unbeaten string to 18 yesterday at Bullis, beating the Little Admirals, 14-0.

Halfback Bob Reiley scored the visitors' first touchdown in the second quarter, skirting right end for 37 yards.

Guard Bob Sgro, who kicked both Fork Union extra points, set up the fourth-period tally by recovering a fumble on the Bullis 38-yard line. Penn Johnson and Reiley took turns advancing the ball, with Johnson going around right end for the last 13 yards.

Bullis threatened only once, advancing to the Fork Union 34 in the third quarter, before a backfield-in-motion penalty stalled the drive.

The loss was Bullis' second in seven starts.

The Lowest Bidder
It's unwise to pay too much, but it's worse to pay too little. When you pay too much, you lose a little money—that is all. When you pay too little, you sometimes lose everything, because the thing you bought was incapable of doing the thing it was bought to do. The common law of business balance prohibits paying a little and getting a lot—it can't be done. If you deal with the lowest bidder, it is well to add something for the risk you run. The Green Wave Flows Over Sputtering Middies

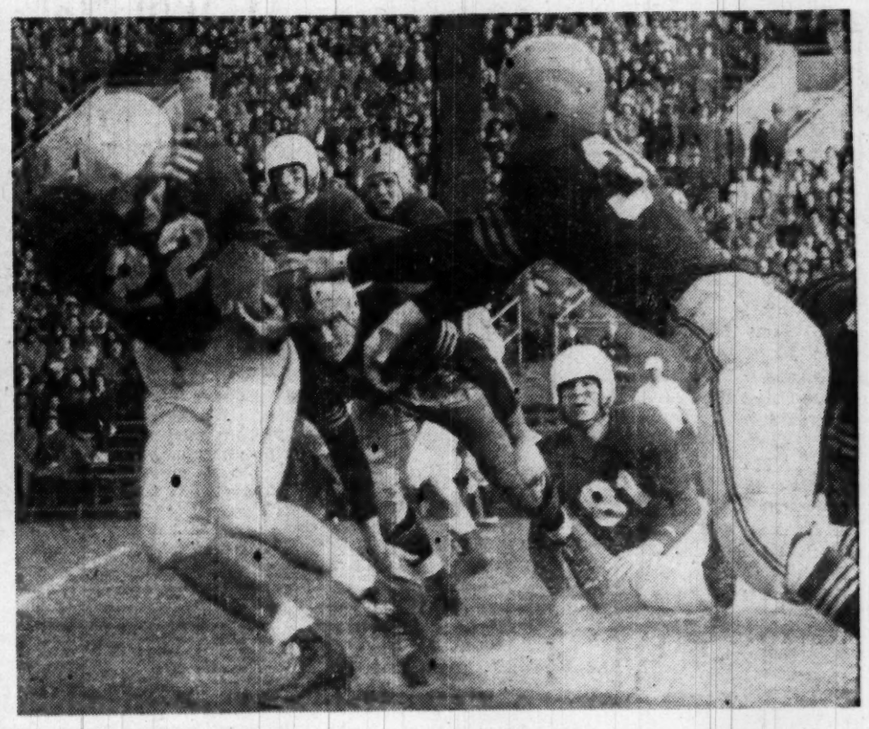
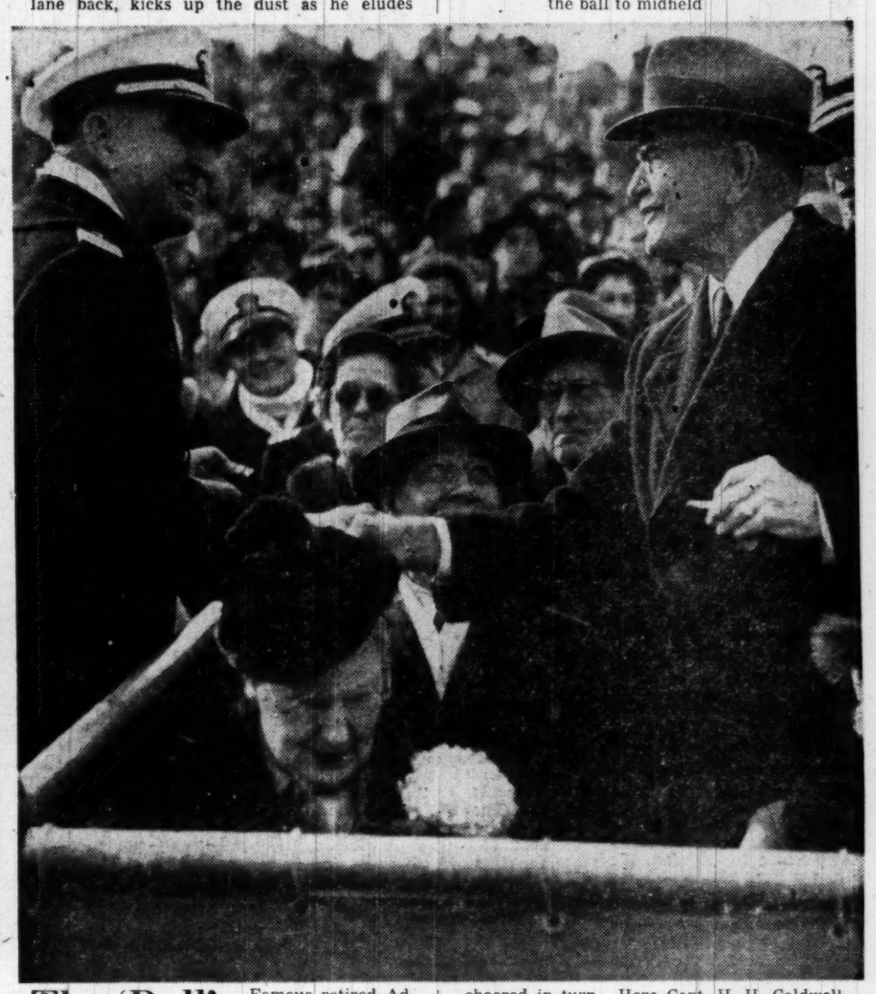
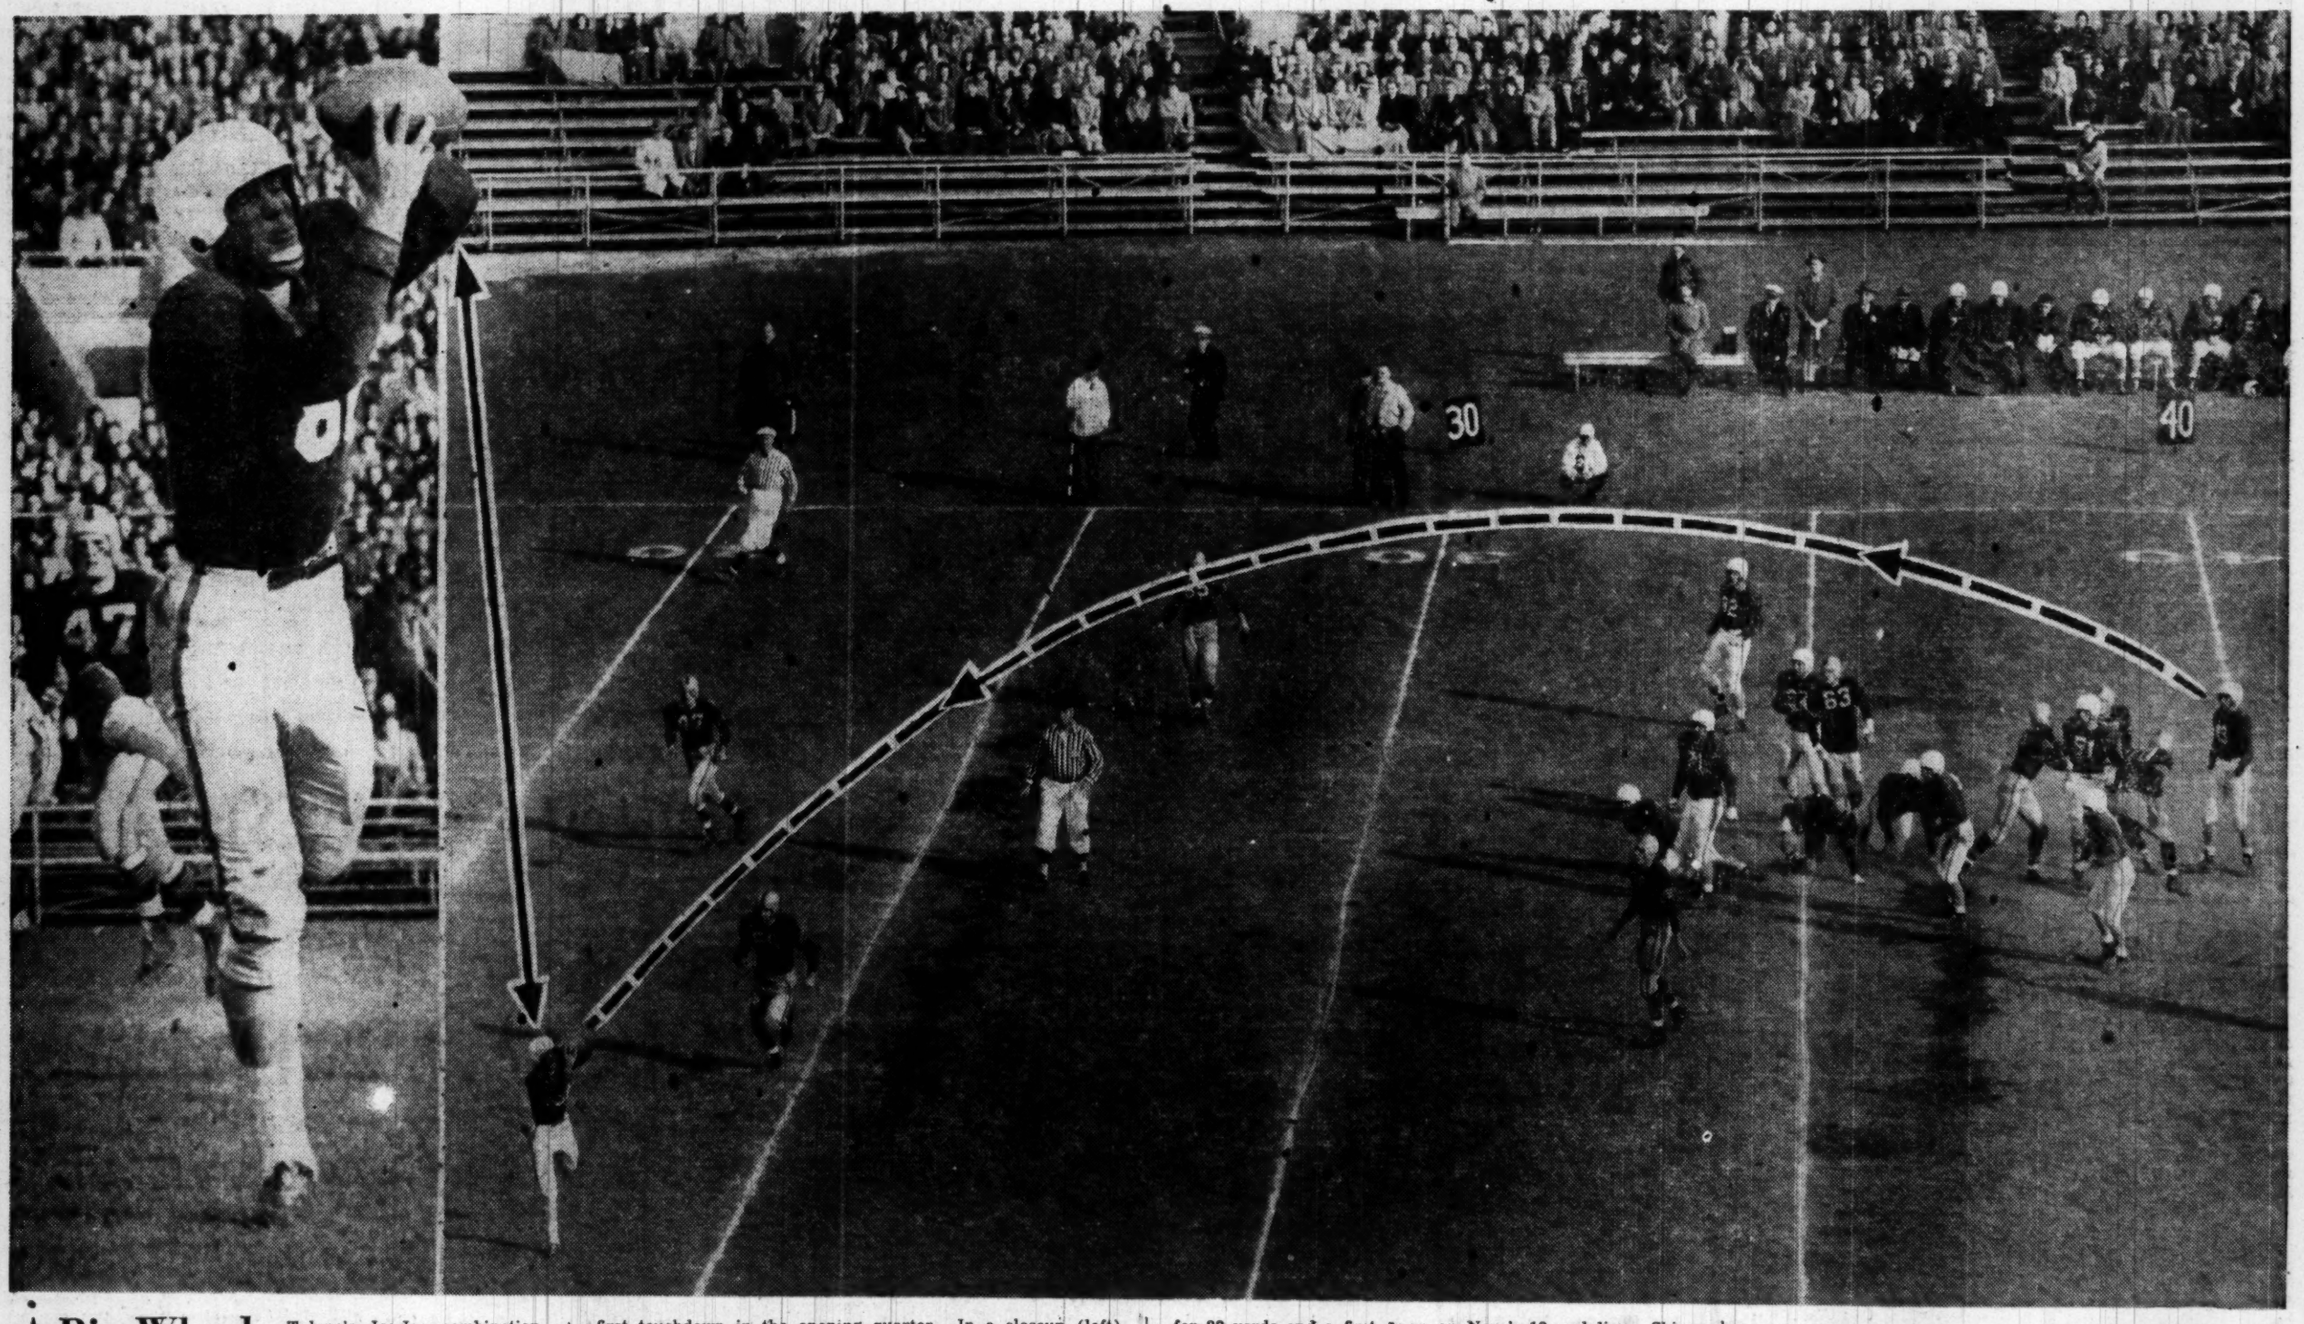
Send-Off— Navy's Midshipmen, still confident despite defeat after defeat this season, gave their gridmen a rousing reception as they came on the field at Baltimore's Municipal Stadium yesterday. But the cheers weren't there at the end, after Tulane handed Navy a 27-0 whitewashing. It was the sixth loss in seven games for the Middies



Away He Goes— Hal Waggoner, Tulane back, kicks up the dust as he eludes Navy's Dave Bannerman and scampers for a 22-yard gain in the first quarter. He advanced the ball to midfield



The 'Bull'— Famous retired Admiral William F. "Bull" Halsey cheered for Navy, and was cheered in turn. Here Capt. H. H. Caldwell, Navy's athlete director, greets "The Bull," who couldn't root Navy home yesterday



A Big Wheel— Tulane's Joe-Joe combination, Ernst to Shinn, jarred the Annapolis crew when the Green Wave rolled 73 yards for its first touchdown in the opening quarter. In a closeup (left) Shinn is receiving from Ernst. The panorama shows how the pair worked the aerial attack. This particular pass was good for 28 yards and a first down on Navy's 18-yard line. Shinn was all over the field yesterday, grabbing passes from Ernst and the latter's relief man, Bill Bonar. Shinn hauled in 11 passes

Tigers Score 28 in First 11 Minutes

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 11 (AP). Princeton's unbeaten football team sprinted past Harvard as if it was running through signal practice today to hand the Crimson a 63-to-26 defeat in the forty-third game of their ancient series.

It was one of the biggest scores ever made against Harvard, which has been playing intercollegiate football since 1873, surpassing the 54-14 count run up by Army last year and Princeton's 47-7 victory of 1948.

Led by damaging Dick Kazmaier, Princeton's little triple-threat tailback, Princeton rolled up a 28-0 lead in about 11 minutes of the first quarter, then settled back to give its substitutes a workout.

This was only partly successful as Harvard's Carroll Lowenstein, who is even tinier than Kazmaier, passed for touchdowns in the second and third quarters to match a pair of Princeton scores.

The final period developed into a race, with Princeton scoring three touchdowns and Harvard two.

Kazmaier, who saw little action after he engineered that first-period outburst, scored two of the touchdowns. So did Wingback Bill Kleinsasser. Ed Reed, Jack Davison, Ed Jannotta, Jake McCandless and Jim Gorter made the other Princeton touchdowns and Jack Newell converted all nine times.

For Harvard, Dave Warden, Paul Crowley, Bill Rosenau and Jack West were the scorers.

Bright Sets New Record as Drake Beats Iowa State

AMES, Ia., Nov. 11 (AP)—Drake's Johnny Bright, passing and running for all of Drake's scores set an all-time total offense record today and led his team to a 35-21 victory over Iowa State.

It was the first time since 1941 the Bulldogs have beaten their Big Seven rival.

Bright, scoring four touchdowns and passing for a fifth, counted a net total of 229 yards against the Cyclones. This boosted his season's total to 2400 yards. The previous record was 2187 set in 1942 by Frankie Sinkwich of Georgia.

Cornell Has Tough Time With Colgate

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—Cornell's Big Red beat Colgate today, 26 to 18, and wrapped up the mythical up-State New York big three championship for the fourth year in a row.

Colgate scored a touchdown with only a minute gone in the final session, and came back with another score on a 65-yard run-back of an intercepted pass.

Fullback Walt Liggett smashed across from two yards out for the first score of the final period, after setting it up with a 30-yard gallop.

A few minutes later Left Half Al Simmons intercepted a Cornell pass and brought it back 65 yards to make things uncomfortably close for the Big Red.

Cornell wasted no time at the outset, scoring in less than four minutes when Left Half Bill Scazzero circled right end 28 yards for a touchdown.

Before the period ended, substitute Quarterback Jack Jaeckle flipped a 15-yard scoring pass to Left End Harvey Sampson, and the Big Red had 14 big points when Bill Kirk split the uprights with both conversions.

After letting Colgate take the play away in the second quarter, Cornell went on the prowl again with another pair of touchdowns in the third quarter.

Quarterback Rocco Calvo flipped a 29-yard pass to Right Half Bill Whelan to make it 20-6 in less than five minutes after the start of the second half. Then Kirk ambled 35 yards around left end for a score that climaxed a 50-yard drive in two plays. The other dash was by Right Halfback Stumerz, who zipped 24 yards.

Howard Beats Delaware, 7-6

DOVER, Del., Oct. 11—Howard University pulled a close football contest out of the fire here today in the last three minutes of the game to defeat Delaware State College, 7-6.

Hal Davidson capped a 52-yard drive for the Bisons with a 3-yard quarterback sneak for the touchdown. With the score tied, 6-6, Skippy Neverson, Howard kicking specialist formerly of Armstrong High of Washington, booted the all-important conversion to win the game.

Delaware scored in the second quarter on a 6-yard pass, Herb Ramsey to Fred Brown, to climax a 75-yard march down the field. Bob Reeves missed the extra point. Howard drove inside Delaware's 5-yard line three times, but until Davidson's plunge, was not able to tally.

quarter when the Badgers took a 7-0 lead.

After the Bucks had moved on the ground 47 yards to the Badger 27, the visitors threw Ohio ball-carriers for 32 yards in losses in three plays.

And after taking a punt they moved 60 yards in nine plays for the opening score. Roy Burks set off the drive with a 17-yard run and then Coatta threw first down passes to Tilden Meyers and Gene Felker. Coatta climaxed the drive with a 5-yard touchdown pass to Burks and then kicked the extra point.

Ohio came back with a 62-yard drive to the Badger three, where Wisconsin dug in for three downs and then took the ball on the eight as Felker recovered Janowicz's fumble.

Hammond quick-kicked to Ohio's 37 and 11 plays later Ohio had its first touchdown. Janowicz passed to Watson for 33 yards to start the drive and wound it up with a three-yarder to Watson on fourth down.

That left Wisconsin—which entered the game tied for second with a 4-1 Big Ten record behind Ohio's then 4-0 mark—leading 7-6 at the half as Bill Trautwein missed Ohio's conversion.

Late Rally Helps Hoya Frosh Win Over Richmond

Nursing a 6-0 lead at the end of three quarters, Georgetown's freshman team broke loose with two quick fourth-period scores and went on to defeat Richmond's frosh, 19-6, at Georgetown yesterday.

Left Halfback Jerry Callagy sprinted 11 yards for the first score. Then, on the first play following the ensuing kickoff, Left End Emil Gaveglio intercepted a Spider pass and ran 50 yards for a touchdown.

Right Half Bill Walsh went 29 yards through tackle for the first Hoya tally in the first quarter. Richmond scored late in the game, blocking a Hoya punt, which was recovered in the end zone.

Subs Team Up For Marquette Victory, 21-19

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 11 (AP)—A pair of substitutes teamed up on a last quarter touchdown pass today to pull Marquette from behind and give the Hilltoppers a 21-19 homecoming football victory over the Holy Cross Crusaders.

Young Dan Leahy, whose only previous appearances in the intersectional game were for successful conversions, tossed 33 yards to reserve end Jim Tobias for the score which erased a 19-14 deficit with 4:35 remaining in the final period. He then booted this third extra point to sew it up.

A crowd of 16,500 fans watched the advertised passing duel between Frank Volm of Marquette and the Crusaders' sensational Charley Maloy in sub-freezing temperatures.

Marquette led at halftime by 14-13. The 26-degree temperature and a northwest wind slowed both teams to a walk in the third period, but the Crusaders warmed up in the finale. A poor punt out of bounds on the Marquette 31 was all they needed, Mel Massucco cracking right guard from the 2 to put Holy Cross ahead with 12 minutes left. Feltch failed to convert.

A pass interception by Art Lastofka started Marquette to the winning score. He grabbed one of Maloy's tosses on the Marquette 44 and the Hilltoppers pushed to the Holy Cross 33 on five plays. Three passes by Volm were incomplete and Leahy replaced him on fourth down for a game-winning toss which Tobias grabbed in the end zone.

Rutgers Beats Lafayette, 31-7

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 11 (AP)—Rutgers rallied in the second quarter today to brush aside Lafayette 31-7, with a potent ground attack featured by Right Halfback Bob D'Amato's three touchdowns.

A shivering crowd of 9,000 homecoming fans sat in on the kill, seeing Rutgers blast its way 320 yards on land while holding the hapless Leopards to a scant 11 yards. The victory was Rutgers' sixth straight over its ancient Middle Three rival and fourth of the season against three losses. Lafayette has won one of seven.

Lafayette opened the scoring with a surprise touchdown after four and a half minutes of play but quickly fell behind in the second when Rutgers hit pay dirt three times to overcome a 7-6 deficit.

Rutgers	6	19	6	0	—31
Lafayette	7	0	0	0	—7

Rutgers scoring: Touchdowns—D'Amato 3, Laprarie, Denardo. Conversion—Denardo.

Marchibroda Leads Bonnies

OLEAN, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—Ted Marchibroda defied the snow and cold today to throw three touchdown paasses and lead St. Bonaventure to a 38-7 football victory over the University of Toledo.

The solidly built sophomore from Franklin, Pa., also set up another score with a 47-yard pass as the Bonnies won their seventh game of the season and nineteenth straight at home.

Lehigh Slaughters Carnegie, 66-0

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 11 (AP). Lehigh has one more hurdle to make in quest of its first undefeated and untied season in 67 years of intercollegiate football competition after slaughtering previously unbeaten and untied Carnegie Tech today, 66 to 0.

It was simply a case of too much manpower, hard and sharp tackling and power driving ball toters that smothered Tech in its game but futile battle against the Engineers. The victory was Lehigh's eighth straight before 12,000.

Army Takes It Easy With New Mexico, 51-0

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—Army, not wanting to hurt anybody, contented itself with a nominal 51-0 victory over the red-shirted New Mexico Lobos today before 30,476 fans, the most ever to watch a game at Michie Stadium.

There never was a doubt that the Cadets would barge through their twenty-seventh straight contest without defeat. The visitors were outclassed. Earl Blaik, the Army coach, was at Baltimore scouting Navy against Tulane.

His assistants saw to it that the Nation's No. 1 team tempered mercy with strict justice. Gil Stephenson and Jim Cain, first-string backs, were not even in uniform. But those Cadets who did get into the contest could not be restrained entirely.

Al Pollard, the terrific sophomore from the west coast, went 43 and 33 yards on beautiful, weaving runs for a pair of touchdowns. Bob Blaik, the coach's unerring son, passed to his ends for a couple more. Army scored in every quarter. Toward the end of the chilly day the Cadets were playing men the official press box spotters had difficulty identifying.

In justice, the boys from New Mexico tried hard and never quit fighting. They exhibited a pair of backs who could dig for occasional yardage in Roger Cox, a 204-pounder, and Chuck Hill, a light but gifted carrier. They persisted right to the end. But they were overmatched.

The closest the Lobos came to scoring was early in the third period when Herb Hughes got off a fine 36-yard pass which Hill gathered in on Army's 10-yard line. It was an exceptionally fine pass, taken out of the fingers of an Army defender. Unfortunately an official had detected a New Mexico back in motion on the play, and it was called back.

Dartmouth Turns Back Lions, 14 to 7

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 11 (AP).—Bill Roberts sprinted 43 and 50 yards for touchdowns to give Dartmouth a 14-7 victory over Columbia today before 14,000.

Roberts' first dash into the Columbia end zone came during the ninth minute of play and offset the Lions' counter, which was set up by a Dartmouth fumble on its 17-yard line.

Roberts, who averaged 10 yards a crack in 15 carries, then clinched the game in the third period with a 50-yard sprint down the sideline for the winning touchdown.

Columbia grabbed its short-lived lead in the first period when Bob Ott fell on Al Reich's fumble. Seven plays later Howie Hansen sneaked over from less than a foot out for the Columbia score.

Brown Routed by Penn, 50-0; Penn State Stops West Va.

Bagnell, Corbo Lead Easy Win

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11 (AP).—Penn's latent power, smothered last week by Army, exploded with volcanic fury today as Reds Bagnell, Alan Corbo, Glenn Adams and a host of accomplices crushed Brown, 50 to 0.

Everything happened to the Brownies, and it all was bad. They were victims of a safety, fumbles, intercepted passes, kickoffs rolling dead and being fallen upon by alert Penn players, and touchdowns rolling into their end zone with monotonous regularity.

In the first period, Bagnell shot through his right tackle for two yards and a touchdown, and in the same quarter Warren Horton took a six-yard pass from Bagnell for another six-pointer.

In the second period Corbo went over from 21 yards out on a pitchout, and after his teammates had contributed a safety, he drove over from the four for another six points.

Corbo resumed his touchdown spree as the third period opened, plunging one yard for the score after a Brown mental lapse had enabled Penn practically to receive its own kickoff. Lee Markoff, Brown halfback, watched the Penn kickoff roll dead on the Brown 17, and before he came out of his trance Vic Mikovich of Penn pounced on the ball: Corbo went over on the fourth play.

Shattuck Scores 2 in 27-0 Game

STATE COLLEGE, PA., Nov. 11 (AP).—Penn State had its best day of the season today as the Nittany Lions ran and passed to a 27-0 victory over West Virginia before 16,000.

The Lions won their third triumph of the season by bottling up the passing attack of the Mountaineers' Quarterback Bill Allen. The visitors, tenth ranking passing team in the Nation last week, tried 33 aerials but connected for only 7 completions.

Penn State struck quickly in the second period for three touchdowns, two of which were the results of fine catches by End John Smidansky.

The Lions, winners over Georgetown and Boston College this year, had their easiest day of the season, rolling up 286 yards on the ground and another 118 on seven completed passes.

It was an even game until the three-minute mark in the second period when Penn State Fullback Ted Shattuck broke off left tackle and raced 30 yards to the West Virginia three. Orsini bowled over for the touchdown.

Two minutes later, Dougherty heaved a 20-yard pass to Smidansky for a touchdown. Smidansky caught a pass from O'Bara later on the one. Shattuck pushed over the score.

Andy Davis, Circle T Club Rally for Tech in Big Game

Andy Davis and the rest of McKinley Tech's sports greats of the past will be out en masse at Griffith Stadium the night of November 24 to root for their alma mater in the Interhigh football championship game, sponsored by The Washington Post, Touchdown Club and Board of Education.

Davis, a great tailback for the George Washington University football team, has called a special executive meeting of Tech's Alumni Circle T Club (Athletic Monogram group) for Tuesday night at the home of Byron T. Hayden, 5505 Chevy Chase Parkway nw.

Davis is president of the Circle T Club.

They will complete plans for buying a block of tickets for their 50-man club, their relatives and neighbors, and expect to have their own solid Tech cheering section of at least 300.

"We couldn't miss the game for anything," declared Davis, who is in Greenville, S. C., with the G.W. team which faces Furman today. "Even though we've graduated Tech is still our team, the best in the city, and we're going to root it home.

"The purpose of the game is wonderful, raising funds to buy athletic equipment for the schools. It coincides with the aims of our club. I can remember the trouble we went through to scrounge together enough uniforms and pads to go around," said Andy. "It's a situation that we are glad, as members of the community, to help alleviate."

Richmond Beats Va. Tech, 32-12, Behind Thomas

BLACKSBURG, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—The Richmond Spiders clipped the football feathers of Virginia Tech, 32-12, here today, depending largely on the accurate passing arm of back Johnny Thomas.

Thomas threw four touchdown passes for a total of 76 yards and then bounced over from the one-yard line for the remaining Spider tally.

Both Tech scores came on long runs, one of 44 yards in the first quarter by Sterling Wingo, the flash backfielder from Richmond, and the second by back Dickie Hiler, of Roanoke, who smashed, crashed and dodged 67 yards in the fourth quarter for the final Tech score.

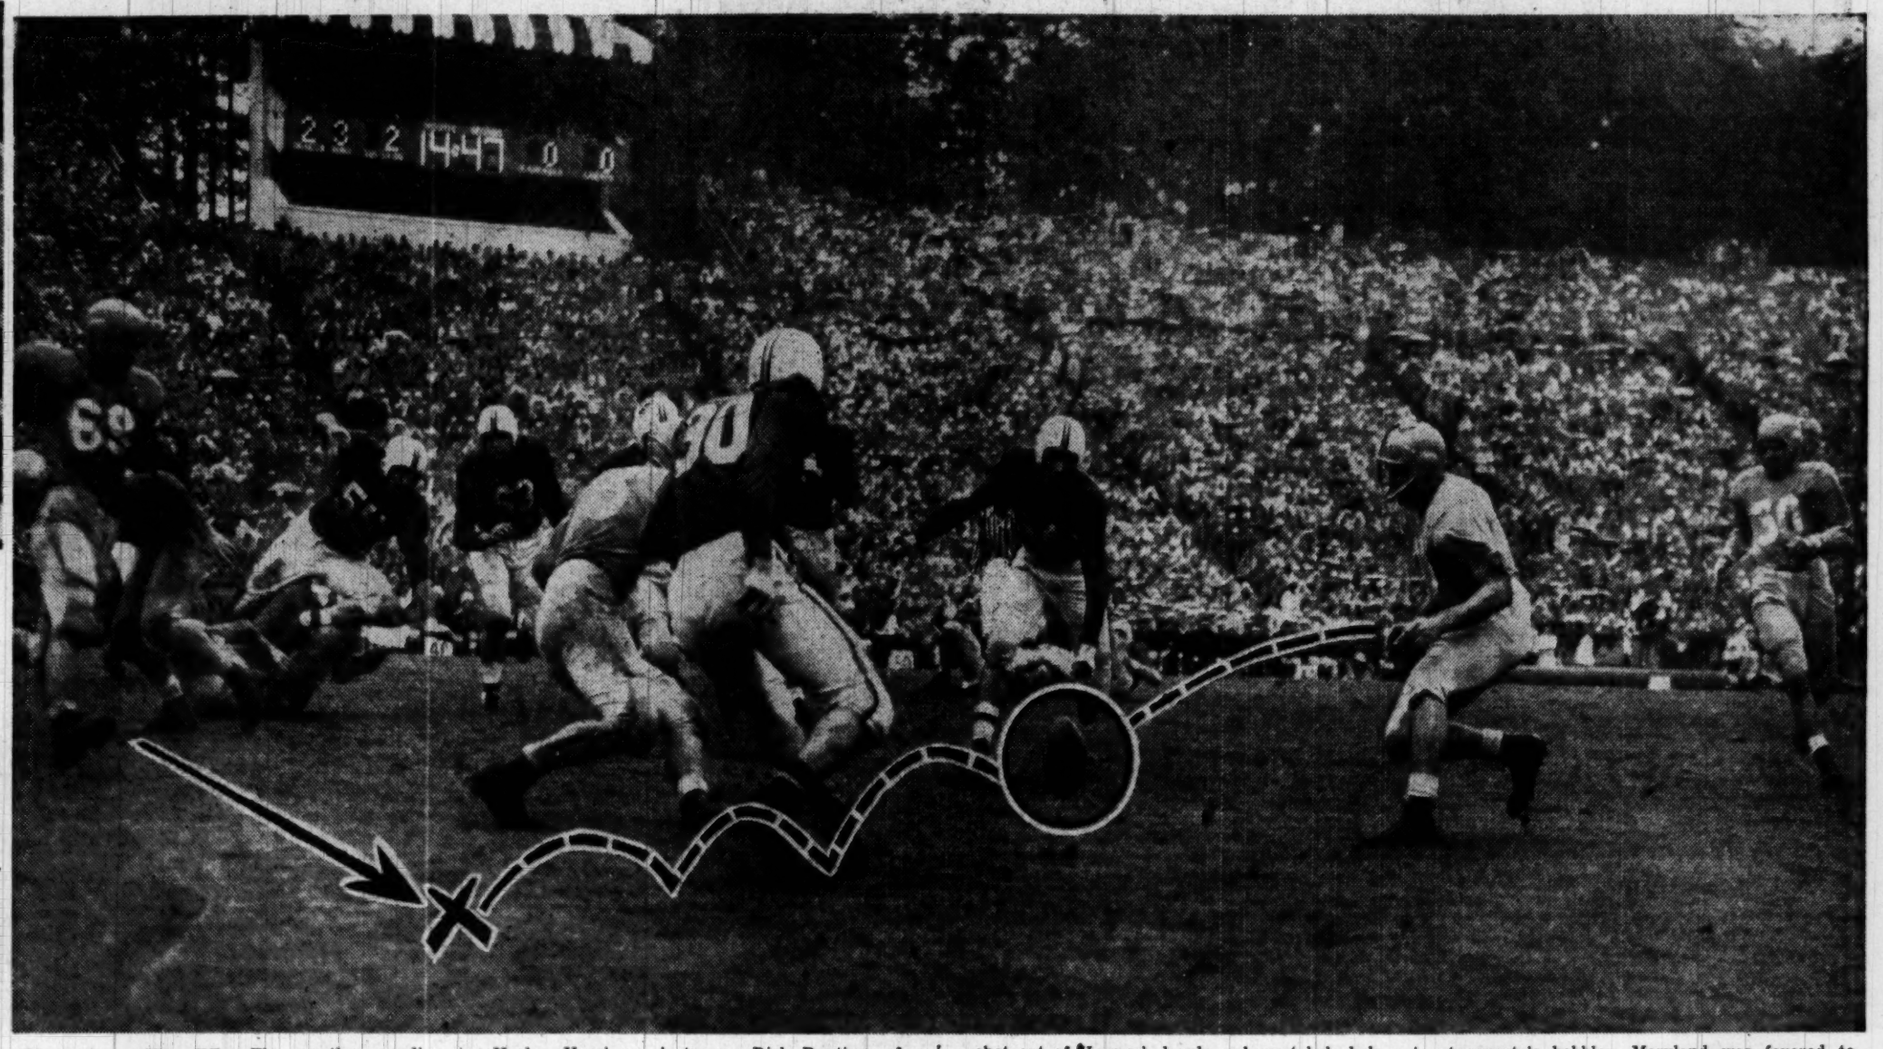
Tar Heels Make It Damp Unpleasant for Terps

Coverup— It poured throughout the Maryland-North Carolina game yesterday at Chapel Hill. But the fans took it blythely. Betty Woodward (left) and Judy Martin, Maryland drum majorettes, are busy keeping their hair dry. Marty Schnurr and Dootsie Martin laugh it off



Loose Ball— The weather conditions made ball handling difficult for both the Terrapins and the Tar Heels. Here's an instance. Dick Bunting, of North Carolina (far right), lateralled to Skeet Hesmer, fullback. Then it happened. The ball shot out of Hesmer's hands and went bob, bob, bobbing along. Fortunately, George Morris, Carolina end, was on the job and recovered his teammate's bobble. Maryland was favored to whip North Carolina, but the Tar Heels came from behind and knotted the score before 30,000

Over Kansas

Oklahoma Trails, 13-0, Wins, 33-13

LAWRENCE, Kans., Nov. 11 (AP).—Butterfingered Oklahoma recovered its poise and blasted Kansas for four fourth-quarter touchdowns today, smothering the Jayhawkers, 33 to 13, and running its record victory string to 28 straight football games.

The Sooners coughed up the ball four times and lost it once on a pass interception while on the attack in the first half. Kansas led, 7-0, after two quarters, the first time the Sooners had trailed at the halfway mark since the split-T defense was inaugurated at the Oklahoma school in 1946.

Kansas had scored twice, once on a Chet Strehlow-to-Lyn Smith pass for 54 yards in the second quarter, and again on Halfback Wade Stinson's 71-yard gallop early in the third, before the Sooners got busy.

Oklahoma Quarterback Claude Arnold, who threw for four touchdown passes, hit Sophomore Troy Keller for the first Okie score in the third period. Then Oklahoma tied it up, 13-13, on Arnold's 32-yard pass to End Jack Lockett.

Arnold's third touchdown pitch, a honey to Halfback Bill Vessells good for 51 yards, put Oklahoma into the lead to stay.

Kansas was frustrated—and well beaten from that point on. Oklahoma scored its second of three touchdowns in a 3-minute span on Tom Calin's return of a pass interception from the 12-yard line. The last Oklahoma score came late in the period on a 16-yard Arnold-to-John Reddell pass.

WICHITA, Kans., Nov. 11 (AP).—A 203-pound senior fullback, Bob Cook, of Oklahoma City, churned for 60 yards in 26 carries and scored twice as the Oklahoma A. & M. Cowpokes upset the University of Wichita, 32-20, today.

The Shockers, unbeaten in Missouri Valley Conference play until they met the 'Pokes, were ahead only once—20 to 19 at the end of the third quarter. But the slim, 25-man squad from Stillwater pounded back to count twice in closing minutes.

N. Carolina Ties Terps

Tar Heels Drive 80 Yards in 4th Period to Score

Bob Shemonski's 2d-Quarter TD Gives Terps Lead

into the last two plays of the game, the Terps moved 54 yards to the Tar Heel 15-yard line, where it was second and 6 yards to go for a first down and only five seconds to play. At this juncture, Tackle Bob Dean dropped back to the 22-yard line and tried an angled field goal.

The ball was short and wide and Maryland's last chance to break the deadlock ended. The Tar Heels, with just enough time for one more play, ran the ball into the middle of the line, obviously being content with a tie against their favored opponent.

For Terp Coach Jim Tatum, who now has had three chances to upend his alma mater and his old coach, dour Carl Snavely, the tie must have been a bitter pill to swallow. He was quietly confident that at last he had produced a football team capable of upending his old school and his old coach. But on this dark, damp afternoon it wasn't quite good enough.

The game was Maryland's last opportunity to win a plush New Year's Day bowl assignment. A decisive victory over the Tar Heels, who had been beaten by Notre Dame, Tennessee and Wake Forest and tied by Georgia, would move the Terps right back into the bowl picture, a scene from which they were practically pushed out by North Carolina State three weeks ago.

But now, with only West Virginia and VPI remaining, the Terps can hardly qualify, even if they overwhelm their final two foes.

Already without the services of Quarterback Jack Scarbath and Fullback Ed Fullerton, both first stringers, Maryland's woes were compounded in the second quarter when Ed (Mighty Mo) Modzelewski injured his knee and was unable to return to the game.

De Stefano, playing his second game since taking over from Scarbath, called a heady game and passed creditably, but he was unable to run as well as the injured Scarbath or handle the tricky wide stuff the Terrapins' Split-T offense utilizes to such great advantage.

And running through the formidable line the Tar Heels produced today was almost as tough an assignment as sitting in the winterish weather watching the Kenan Stadium game.

Maryland made scoring motions the first time it got the ball, moving 46 yards to the Tar Heel 7-yard line where Guard Joe Dudek spilled Destefano on fourth down to halt that threat.

Early in the second period, Tailback Dick Bunting fumbled a Jack Tagarona punt after Dean and Ed Fincke had whacked him and Karney Scioscia recovered for Maryland on the Tar Heel 31-yard line. A 17-yard DeStefano to Stan Karnash pass featured the 10-play junket which saw Shemonski whip around his own right end for the score.

The Tar Heels, who hadn't been able to mount a sustained offense, clicked for the first time seconds before intermission. With Arlington's Dick Hayes, playing with a mask to protect his factured jaw, and Dickie Bunting doing most of the work, the Carolinians advanced to the 7-yard line, where a fourth-down, Hayes-to-Benny Walster pass missed a first down by inches.

Late in the third quarter, the Tar Heels got started again and this time they ran and passed their way 80 yards into the fourth quarter and over the goal.

Halfback Bob Gantt got 18 yards on a reverse to the Maryland 18-yard line and three plays later the Tar Heels had the ball on the Terps' 12-yard line and needed 4 yards to move the chains. They called on Hayes again and the Arlington senior cut through tackle for 11 yards just as the quarter ended.

The Terps' dug in and held Wallace and Hayes for no gain for two downs, but on third down Wallace cut in between end and tackle and barreled into the end zone without Maryland touching him.

The Terps couldn't do anything about it until the closing minutes of the game when their last-ditch move ended with Dean's abortive field goal try.

Rollie Kirby Leads Huskies Over Oregon

SEATTLE, Nov. 11 (AP)—Rollicking Rollie Kirkby gave the home folk a great display of running and pass grabbing today in leading the Washington Huskies to a 27-12 Pacific Coast Conference triumph over Oregon's bothersome Webfeet.

A crowd of 33,500 saw two Washington sophomores cut themselves a big chunk of glory, big Bill Earley scoring the first touchdown on a pass and Dick Sprague rambling to the last out.

Kirkby scored a pair, both in the third period.

And Don Heinrich, Washington's "arm," hit his receivers 14 times for 158 yards and a new conference yardage record.

Oregon's sophomore quarterback, Hal Dunham, and Senior Guard Ray Lung grabbed a share of spotlight, the former with a fine display of passing and Lung on a great job in the defensive line.

Washington drove 75 yards in 14 paly to a first quarter touchdown, scored twice in the third and once in the fourth. Oregon counted in the second and fourth stanzas.

Leading 7-6, Washington broke the game wide open with its two third-quarter tallies. Kirkby intercepted a pass in midfield to start it and then went the last yard to score the first one after a steady drive.

The stage was set for another one when Tackle Ernie Stein fell on a fumble by Oregon's Bob Carey on the Webfoot 29. On the fourth play, Kirkby danced through guard 15 yards to the goal.

Celtics Beat Caps on Gift Goal, 78-77

The Washington Caps lost 78-77, to the Boston Celtics last night in a National Basketball League game before 1975 customers at Uline Arena.

After trailing, 50-40, at halftime, the Caps caught fire and outplayed the Beantown basketeers to tie the game 75-75 with a minute and a half to go.

Then Dick Schnittker pulled an under-the-basket boner to give Brady Walker a gift field goal and the game went frittering away from the locals.

As Schnittker recovered a rebound under the Celtics' basket, he was falling out of bounds. The former Ohio State star tossed the ball onto the playing floor without looking. Walker, all by himself under the basket, caught the ball and calmly dunked it in.

Bob Donham made a free throw for Boston, and Freddie Scolari made a desperation basket in the last second of the contest, but it was Walker's basket which decided the issue.

Miller Breaks Scoring Mark

EMORY, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Brilliant Bob Miller galloped for three touchdowns, one on an 80-yard punt return, to establish a new collegiate scoring record in Virginia as he led the Emory and Henry Wasps to crushing 4-0 victory over the Western Carolina Catamounts today.

Immediately after their triumph the Wasps accepted a bid from the Johnson City Burley Bow l to again serve as host team for the 1950 classic.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Nov. 11. (AP).—Bill Howton, a lightweight end who played the full 60 minutes, fired the Rice Owls to a 9-6 Southwest Conference football victory over hot and cold Arkansas today.

Howton, weighing 177 pounds, made an unbelievable catch of Vernon Glass' 31-yard pass for a Rice touchdown in the first quarter. Near the end he caught another long throw by Glass deep in Arkansas territory to set up a safety.

Bears Pound Out 35-0 Win Over UCLA

"Red" Sanders' current UCLA team had failed to score.

California's "touchdown threesome," halfbacks Peter Schabarum and Jim Monachino, and fullback John Olszewski, ripped the UCLA line to shreds with a ground game that could not be denied. Jim Marinos, quarterback, guided the winners by masterful play calling.

The Bears turned a recovered fumble on the UCLA 29-yard line into an early third-period touchdown. Marinos threw 19 yards to reserve left end Bob Fitzgerald into the end zone for the score.

Olszewski, sophomore fullback, ran 72 yards in a third-period thriller for the fourth touchdown. He went around the Bruins' left end, then cut back and outdistanced pursuers easily.

The Bears charged 61 yards in the final quarter for their fifth touchdown. Right half sub Harry West went over from the 1-yard line. Les Richter, California's 230-pound All-America candidate for guard, placekicked all the conversions.

The Bruins made their only sustained drive late in the game when they took the ball from their own 24 to the California 21. Sub left half Whitney Arceneaux sparked the thrust, connecting with four passes and packing the ball for good gains.

It was California's thirty-second consecutive victory in regular season games and the twenty-second conference win in a row since 1947., Waldorfg's first year as coach.

Missouri Wins, 21-19

COLUMBIA, Mo., Nov. 11 (AP).—University of Missouri's Tigers combined air and ground might today to nose out the University of Colorado, 21-19, in a Big Seven conference football game before 22,000 shivering fans.

On the first scrimmage play of the game Zack Jordan raced 30 yards and then by short gains, the Coloradoans moved up the field. A 15-yard pass, Jordan to Roger Williams, helped and then Jordan passed to Williams for 8 yards and a touchdown.

On the next scrimmage play John Glorioso passed 20 yards to Gene Ackerman, who took the ball on Colorado's 40-yard line and raced the rest of the way for Missouri's opening touchdown.

A few minutes later Missouri scored again, this time Klein passing 23 yards to Junior Wren, who cut back and sprinted 23 more for the touchdown.

In the second quarter, Glorioso's pass, intended for Wren, was intercepted by Royal Shepard for Colorado. Jordan lost 9 yards before the Coloradoans could get under way. Then Ralph Curtis picked up 28 yards. Jordan tossed a couple of 13-yard passes, one to Williams and another to Merwin Hodel, to help out. The Buffaloes then moved into scoring range on short punches and Hodel went over for the touchdown.

Colorado started from its 47-yard line in the third quarter and drove to Missouri's 32-yard line where Dane Graves executed a brilliant cut-back to break out for a touchdown run.

Missouri quickly swept back in the closing quarter. Tom Brookshier interfered with Bill Hampel as he was trying for Klein's pass on the 12 and the officials ruled it had been completed. Glorioso flipped a short pass to Junior Wren who went to the 1-yard line. Klein went on over from there.

Wyoming has only one conference game remaining, a Thanksgiving Day tussle with Denver University. A defeat there would force the Cowboys into a tie with Colorado A and M for first place in final conference standings.

Reynolds Guns Nebraska Win

LINCOLN, Nebr., Nov. 11 (AP).—Rambling Bob Reynolds of Nebraska rang up a new Big Six-Big Seven Conference scoring and rushing records today, leading his team to a 49 to 21 victory over Kansas State.

Reynolds broke the rushing record in the third quarter when he dashed 22 yards for his second touchdown. That run gave him a season total of 1099 yards, one yard better than the old mark of 1098 set by Bob Steuder of Missouri in 1942.

It also gave Reynolds 118 points for the season to date, one point better than the old Big Seven record which George Thomas, Oklahoma, established last year.

Miss. State Bows, 48-21, To Kentucky

STARKVILLE, Miss., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Babe Parilli threw three touchdown passes and palmed the ball like a riverboat gambler today to lead Kentucky to a resounding 48 to 21 victory over Mississippi State before 28,000 fans.

Kentucky rolled on unbeaten anad untied in its greatest season of the century over a team that until today was rated the best offensively in the Nation despite a mediocre won-lost record.

Parilli's touchdown passes were hauled in by Dominic Fucci, Clayton Webb and Al Bruno. The three gave Parilli 18 touchdown tosses for the year, tying the conference record set by Charlie Conerly of Mississippi in 1947.

Parilli gained 233 yards through the air, completing 13 out of 21.

Each team fumbled five times and there were numerous injuries due to fierce tackling and blocking.

Kentucky struck for 27 points in the second period. Two Parilli passes and a 17-yard run by Wilber Jamerson put the ball on the 3 and Clayton Webb plunged over. Bob Gain converted.

On the first play after the kickoff, Fucci intercepted Gil Verderber's pass on the State 45 and romped for a touchdown.

Bill Stewart fumbled for State on the next scrimmage and Doug Moseley recovered for Kentucky on the State 46. Four plays later Jamerson ran 18 yards through the line for the touchdown. Stewart fumbled again, with Moseley again recovering, on the State 37. Parilli passed to Webb, who fell across the goal line.

State then got into the interception act, Max Stainbrook snatching one of Parilli's throws on the State 33. Ed Lechler passed to Polovina on the Kentucky 23 and he got down to the 19. Two Lechler to Steve Clark passes netted a touchdown.

VMI's Coley Leads Upset Over Ga. Tech

ATLANTA, Nov. 11 (AP).—Virginia Military Institute's quarterback Jimmy Coley passed and masterminded his team to a 14-13 upset victory over Georgia Tech today.

VMI's victory was the first Cadet victory in 10 games between the two teams. This one came on the forty-second birthday of Tech Coach Bobby Dodd.

The Cadets got their first touchdown after Coley split the Tech defenses with two long passes to Petree and another to Bill Leck. Finally Joe Stump bucked the touchdown from the 1 on the first play of the second quarter. Birge converted.

After Petree's punt bounded out of bounds on the VMI 28, Tech scored in five plays, the final one an 11-yard pass from Darrell Crawford to Dick Harvin.

Patton's missed conversion spelled the difference in the final score.

VMI made its second touchdown in the third period with Stump again bucking it over after the play was set up by a Coley-to-Petree pass that carried 45 yards to the Tech 3.

Tech came back early in the next period when Crawford's pass from the 12 carried to John Weigle in the end zone. Patton's kick was good.

Clemson Rips Boston, 35-14

BOSTON, Nov. 11 (AP)—Undefeated Clemson smothered winless Boston College 35 to 14 today with a sparkling third-period demonstration of running and passing.

The single-wing dashes of the speedy Southern backs rolled up 304 yards, much of it in the third stanza as the Tigers rung up four quick touchdowns.

The pile-driving smashes of fullback Fred Cone and the swivel-hipped runs of Jackie Calvert and Billy Hair softened the B. C. frontier. When Hair and Calvert took to the air they had little difficulty finding their receivers.

The small crowd of 9606 saw a first half that featured only one touchdown. Cone banged over from the 2-yard line after 13 minutes of play in the first period. In the third quarter, however, the Southerners started rolling and clicked off five touchdowns.

Boston scored both of its touchdowns in the final quarter. Passes by Dick McBride—who tips the scales at only 150—led to both.

BOSTON, Nov. 11 (AP)—Despite three costly fumbles, Boston University's Terriers overpowered weaker, though well-drilled, New York University, 41-13, today as 3724 shivered in Fenway Park.

Frustrated by a fumble in the scoreless opening period, B. U. regathered for three touchdowns in the second quarter and added three more in the finale. The last six pointer was scored with only a second of playing time left.

B. U. superiority over the weaker New Yorkers was proved by the game statistics which showed the home forces gained 241 yards aground to NYU's 111. The Terrier air assault was good for 69 yards compared to NYU's 26.

LSU Rocks Vandy, 33-7, On Passes

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov 11 (U.P.).—Louisiana State humbled Vanderbilt's once-proud Commodores, 33 to 7, today, with a devastating combination of ground power and long-range passing.

Sophomore Norman Stevens' pass to Norman Virgets in the first quarter good for a total 71 yards set the pattern of the game. Jimmy Barton took over from Stevens and pitched 29 and 19-yard scoring passes in the third period to really sew up the verdict.

Kenz Konz, SLU's backfield workhouse, had scored LSU's second touchdown on a 2-yard plunge in the second period and Billy West ran 7 yards in the fourth period for the final score.

Bill Wade's passing produced Vanderbilt's lone touchdown. He tossed a short one that fullback Jim Tabor carried 30 yards for a touchdown shortly after LSU had made its first.

But after Konz scored Vanderbilt never got back in the game and Wade's tosses were badly off in the second half. Armand Kitto, sub LSU end, intercepted one of them to set up a 70-yard drive climaxed by Barton's 29-yard pass to Virges.

Dick Foster's 62-yard kickoff return set up the Vanderbilt touchdown drive.

just that on a 67-yard touchdown scamper. Bugs slid off tackle, broke into the secondary and sped madly down the side line.

At the Fordham 20, Fullback Gino Pagluica threw the key block that put Bugs home. Thompson cut over and went into the end zone without being touched.

Fordham had gone ahead late in the second period on a bruising 62-yard march on 12 ground plays. Fullback Larry Higgins and Halfback Jack Hyatt alternated in eating up the yardage, five and six at a clip.

Georgetown got tough when the Rams reached the eight, but Higgins went over from the one on fourth down. Ed Kozdeba made the conversion and the all-important second one, too.

Hyatt, a soph speedster, matched Thompson's run in the third period when he scampered 28 yards for a touchdown.

In the fourth period, Fordham appeared on its way for another six-pointer for insurance. With Vin Drake replacing Quarterback Dick Doheny, Fordham started running again and pushed 72 yards for a first down on the Hoya seven.

Joe Kozdeba, brother of the extra-point hero, made the big run to that point when he went 29 yards before Capt. Tommy Hardiman made a saving tackle.

Kozdeba made 1, then Fordham was offside and Georgetown took the penalty that put the ball on the 11. Here Coach Ed Danowski inserted Doheny again and the crowd didn't like it.

Bats Down Pass

They had more reason to boo when Doheny failed to take Fordham over. On fourth down Bob Versprille batted down a Doheny pass and Georgetown took possession on its 10.

To the surprise of everybody, the Hoyas then went all the way. It was a dramatic march that started with Thompson and Dick Doyle valiantly racing up and down the sidelines, trying to get their pesky ankles in shape for the drive. When they did come in, Frank Mattingly crossed up Fordham by taking to the air.

Terry Murphy filled in nicely when he swept 15 yards to the 25. Then Mattingly, calling and throwing on all cylinders, executed a trick pass play with End Dick Losh and the Hoyas were up to their 44.

The drive appeared doomed when End Gus Fornaciari dropped a Mattingly pass that would have meant a first down on Fordham's 43. On fourth down, with time rapidly running out, Georgetown went for the 4 yards it needed. This time the undaunted Mattingly threw to Gus again. It clicked to Fordham's 41.

Then Fornaciari, who well could have been the goat, took a Mattingly pass for 33 yards to the 2. On the first try, Gino Paglucia plunged into the end zone for the score that made it, 14-13. That's the way it ended as guard Mike Carra always will attest.

Tennessee Tramples Tech, 48 to 14

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 11 (AP).—Tennessee trampled little Tennessee Tech, 48 to 14, today in warming up for its Southeastern Conference date with Mississippi next Saturday.

The visitors opened up with a troublesome passing attack to tally both their touchdowns, Quarterback Phillip Webb nailing End Flavius Smith in the end zone each time.

Halfback Hank Lauricella started Tennessee's scoring by racing 81 yards for a touchdown the first time the Vols got the ball. Fullback Andy Kozar dived over for the second from the 3-yard line after line-backer Ken Pruett intercepted a pass on Tech's 26.

The Vols brought their aerial game into play for their next two scores, Halfback Hal Payne passing to End George Carter for both.

End Bud Sherrod ran 30 yards for Tennessee's fifth score, picking up the ball after Guard Ted Daffer blocked Webb's kick.

Lauricella passed 34 yards to End Jim Kaseta for the Vols' next six-pointer and third-string tailback Pat Shires plunged four yards to wind up the scoring. Shires also kicked four extra points out of five tries to run his total for the season to 26.

W&L Dazzles Delaware, 32-0

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 11 (AP).—Washington and Lee's magician, Quarterback Gil Bocetti, faked Delaware U. defenders dizzy here this afternoon in the Generals' 32-0 route of the Blue Hens.

But not until 2:35 of the second quarter did the Generals go all the way. Bocetti handed off to sophomore halfback Randall Broyles, who swept left end for seven yards and the first score.

With only 2:30 left in the half, Bocetti called on fullback Charlie Holt to take a crossback 46 yards over tackle for the second TD.

W. & L. scored another touchdown after five minutes of the second half. Jim Stark scored from the one and Michaels converted.

Before the quarter ended, W. & L. drove 54 yards with Stark going nine for the touchdown.

Broyles swept left end for two yards and the final score. Michaels converted once more.

Trinity Routs Amherst, 47-13; Williams Beats Wesleyan, 36-0

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 11 (AP). Trinity combined a deceptive running attack with accurate passing as it overwhelmed Amherst, beaten only once before this season, 47 to 13, today before 5000.

Trinity jumped into a quick lead by scoring the first two times it gained the ball. Amherst got back in the game momentarily in the third quarter by recovering a fumble on the Trinity 20 and scoring in three plays later.

Trinity recouped a few minutes later on a 73-yard scoring march. Bob Davidson accounted for Amherst's last score, a long heave to John McGrath, on the first play in the final period. The winners then broke the contest wide open, with three touchdowns, one of them set up by Bill Goralski's 54-yard run and the other two on passes.

Amherst and Wesleyan tied earlier in the season, 14-14. Defending Little Three titlist Williams can claim the championship next week at Amherst.

Williams, which has dropped only its opener to powerful Princeton, had its air and ground attack in high gear in the final two periods while Wesleyan had trouble with its offense throughout.

Rubni Blocks 2 Punts for Scores

Little Citadel Surprises Wadiak And South Carolina, 19 to 7

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Center Sam Rubino blocked two punts for touchdowns and his mates put Steve Wadiak in reverse today to give The Citadel a 19 to 7 upset victory over favored South Carolina.

A crowd of 13,000 wildly cheering fans saw the underrated Bulldogs outfight and outplay the Gamecocks for the full 60 minutes.

Rubino, who played every minute, ran one of the punts he blocked for a touchdown and End Paul Drews picked up the second one Rubino blocked and went 3 yards for the score.

The final Citadel touchdown came on a flat pass by Quarterback Buddy Friedlin to Halfback Rudy Wilcox who was out as a "sleeper."

Jerry Deluca, end for The Citadel, shared the line limelight with Rubino, Deluca on one sequence tossed Carolina ball carriers on three straight plays leaving the visitors with fourth down and 44 to go.

Walston Scores

Georgia Wins, 6-0, Over Fla. On 6-Yard Pass by Cook

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 11 (AP).—Georgia's mammoth football team put together one touchdown drive climaxed by a 6-yard pass from Mal Cook to Bob Walston to defeat Florida, 6 to 0, today.

This was Georgia's twenty-second victory over Florida out of 27 games in one of the South's best traditional series, and it was a rough, hard battle all the way. The Gator Bowl stadium was packed with 36,132 persons.

Georgia made its lone tally in the second period by starting a march from the Florida 45.

Bill Mixon's 16-yard run took the ball to the 29, and Gus Helbovy and Lukie Brunson did the heavy work from there to the 6. On the touchdown pass Cook was chased wide by Florida's defense but he finally sighted Walston standing all alone on the goal line and threw squarely into his arms.

In the closing minute Mike Merola of Georgia intercepted one of Haywood Sullivan's passes on the Florida 25 and Georgia punched to the 3-yard line, when the game ended.

Touchdown—Walston.

Papit Leads Virginia, 13-0, Over W. & M.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Fullback Johnny Papit jabbed and bludgeoned a big, stubborn William and Mary line to lead Virginia to a 13-0 victory today in the first clash between the State's two powerhouses in 10 years.

A crowd of 33,500 watched the heavier William and Mary line chop down the Virginia offensive with ruthless precision through most of the game.

But Papit gave Virginia the scoring edge by crashing through on a 19-yard touchdown run and breaking loose for 28 yards to set up the other score.

A first period Papit touchdown run from the four was called back by a penalty, but the 195-pound Philadelphia flyer had a near-perfect afternoon, rolling up a total of 161 yards in 29 tries. His average of 5.5 yards included other runs of 26, 10 and 9 yards.

William and Mary, loser five times earlier this season, was definitely up today, but could not withstand the power that gained Virginia six victories earlier this season.

Three savage goal line stands by William and Mary held off Virginia until the final 50 seconds of the first half when Paul Yewcic's punt was blocked on his own 7.

The losers staged offensive drives of 70 and 74 yards in the final half, but the Virginia line held, the last time on the three-yard line with only seconds left to play.

Between these two drives Papit broke loose for a 28-yard run that set up the final touchdown. Quarterback Rufus Barkley passed from the seven to end Gene Schroeder on the goal line.

Gallaudet Loses, 20-0

KEYSER, W. Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Potomac State closed one of its most successful football campaigns in years today with an easy 20-to-0 victory over Gallaudet College of Washington, D. C.

The Catamounts wrapped up their triumph in the last two periods. It was their eighth win against only one loss, that to the George Washington University Frosh.

Bill Allman gave Potomac a 7-to-0 halftime lead as he scored in the closing minutes on a play which started near the goal line. In the final period Allman went across from 9 yards out. Bill Graurich completed the afternoon's work with a 7-yard touchdown run. Bob Johnson kicked the extra points after the first two touchdowns.

Gallaudet's biggest threat was in the second period when it was held for four downs on the Potomac 2-yard line.

Wake Forest Upsets Duke By 13-7

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Guido Scarton, a stubby halfback from Houston, Pa., raced through holes scooped out by a mean and hungry line today to lead Wake Forest to a startling 13-to-7 victory over Duke.

About 25,000 fans forgot the rain and cold to marvel at the 162-pound Scarton's ability to shed tacklers. He struck for one score 11 minutes after the game started and was driving for another at the finish.

All the scoring, however, was accomplished in the first half. In the second half, Wake Forest's giant line let Duke past midfield only once.

Wake Forest scored the second time it gained possession of the ball after stopping a passing thrust by Duke's brilliant Billy Cox. From the Dukes, Kissell handed off to Scarton, who swept around left end to score. Quarterback Carroll Blackerby's kick was no good.

Duke rolled into a 91-yard scoring drive on the next kickoff. Cox ran and passed to his own 34, where he heaved the luckiest pass ever seen in Duke Stadium. The ball bounced off a Wake Forest man on the 50, slipped through the fingers of a Duke man and settled into the arms of Fullback Jack Mounie, who took off for 40 yards to the Wake Forest 10. Charlie Smith sailed around left end to score in the first play of the second period. End Mike Souchak made the conversion.

Late in the second period, Quarterback Dickie Davis hit Jack Lewis with a long pass on the Duke 20 and Lewis dodged over to score. Blackerby kicked the point.

Lary Brothers Grab 5 Touchdown Passes for Alabama

TUSCALOOSA, Ala, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—The Lary brothers cavort five touchdown passes today and if the scoreboard operator didn't lose count Alabama romped over little Mississippi Southern 53 to 0.

Left End Al Lary, a senior making his final appearance before 15,000 of his chilled home-towners, snagged three pay-off throws in the second period.

His brother, Ed, at the opposite end of the Crimson Tide line, grabbed two touchdown tosses both in the third quarter.

Eddie Salem threw Al his first two tally gainers, the second for 51 yards and then James (Bimbo) Melton heaved a 21-yard pass which Al made good just before the half ended.

After Ed took Butch Avinger's aerial for a count, George McCain caught a touchdown hurled from Clell Hobson. Then Ed marked up another counter when he grabbed one from McCain.

Carolina Queen Scores Upset in Pimlico's Margurite

Bill Bennings

Dear Folks At Pimlico

George (Slim) Edwards, the agent who is handling Joe Culmone as he attempts to land the national riding title, was pleased when Culmone tied Johnny Longden's 319 winners, although Willie Shoemaker, on the West Coast, beat the Italian youth to that accomplishment last week. Edwards believes that Culmone can average two winners a day for the remainder of the season. If he does that, he will top the all-time mark of 388 winners held by Walter Miller in 1906. Culmone has 42 racing days remaining this year and, barring accident or suspension, could make the grade. He won 18 races in seven days here. However, keeping up a two-a-day average is a tough assignment even for a Culmone—Bill.

Favored Aunt Jinny Runs Second

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

PIMLICO, Md., Nov. 11—Carolina Queen, a courageous daughter of Bull Dog, tore through the stretch today and jolted the talent in the sixth running of The Margurite, $15,000 added test for 2-year-old fillies.

The brown filly showed a total disregard for Aunt Jinny, winner of the Selima Stakes and other big races for Duval A. Headley, and triumphed going away by a length and a half over the miss who, until today, seemed well on the road to the year's title in her division.

Third money in the field of eight went to Brookmeade Stable's Two Rainbows, half of the entry saddled by Trainer Preston Burch of Washington, D. C. Two Rainbows failed despite some almost frantic riding by Joe Culmone.

Pays $43.60

It was all to the tune of $43.60 win mutuel that Carolina Queen carried the colors of Boshamer to victory over the mile and sixteenth course in 1.47 1/5 seconds slowest for the stake. The track was fast and a top-coated and fur-coted crowd of 17,283 supplied the first million-dollar betting day of the fall campaign in Maryland.

Carolina Queen was ridden by Jockey Frank Bone, owner of an Oklahoma ranch and third in the national riding race behind Willie Shoemaker and Joe Culmone. She was saddled by Trainer E. H. (Ned) Gaines who graduated from Charles Town and this state's halfmilers.

Aunt Jinny, under the handling of Nick Wall, pulled up slightly late after the battle, although she showed no signs of faltering in the stretch. She carried 116 pounls to 119 for Carolina Queen while Two Rainbows was in action with low weight of 114 pounds.

Aunt Jinny Goes Wide

Wall rode confidently on Aunt Jinny and may have overdone it. With Flanvee a head in front and the two Brookmeade fillies, Two Rainbows and Atalanta, in between, Aunt Jinny was on the outside at the Clubhouse turn, being forced so wide that she dropped back several lengths on the backstretch.

Along the far side, Flanvee appeared to falter and Culmone shot Two Rainbows to the front. Then Wall pushed Aunt Jinny and the Heliopolis filly went after the Brookmeade leader.

Aunt Jinny swept to the front entering the stretch and her backers began to head for the pay-off windows. However, it was at this point that Bone shook up Carolina Queen. She responded boldly.

Wall tried every trick in the book to keep Bone from passing him. He seemed to allow Aunt Jinny to drift out. In addition he waved his whip apparently in the path of the on-coming Carolina Queen.

But Bone and the Bulldog Miss were not to be denied. At the end, they were just minding their business and going into the finish line while opening daylight on Aunt Jinny and the tired Two Rainbows.

Third in 11 Tries for Queen

The victory was the third in 11 tries this year for Carolina Queen. The race grossed $35,308 and the winner took down $28,795

Between Bone and Apprentice Auggie Catalano, Culmone was forced out of the saddle spotlight for the day. Bone followed his Margurite victory by winning the secondary feature, The Time Supply, with Larry MacPhail's General Staff a $21.80 shot.

Culmone's only winner was on B. F. Christmas, The Procurator, a 4.60 favorite that put the finishing touches on a $37.40 daily double.

Catalano had three, he took the first with Mrs. M. E. Woods' Insultin' at $15.40, the third with Cross Bell Ranch's Friendly Frank at $5.20 and the fifth with Brookfield Farms Imacomin at $9.60.

Takes His Fishing Seriously

Arlington's Angling Addict Has Top Catch of Season

By Ralph Murdock

BOBBY APPLETON, a mail carrier in Arlington, Va., really takes his fishing seriously. Less than two years ago, he sold his auto and bought a Cruisalong which he keeps at Deale, Md.

Murdock

Bobby has become quite a fisherman and he has acquired the know-how to locate fish when other anglers have failed.

With C. F. Simpson, Bill Vannerman and Eddie Lewis, all of Arlington, Appleton made his top catch this season. The 25-year-old angler hauled in eight big rock which weighed from nine to 15 pounds and 34 pansize rock off North Beach.

Oddly enough, the fish were taken in shallow water, some at depths of only three feet. Not bad.

FROM A. E. SEAMAN, Chief of the Division of Fish Management, West Virginia State Conservation Commission, comes news that Cacapon Lake near Berkeley Springs will be built up as the best trout fishing spot in this section next season.

MASS MIGRATIONS of Canadian waterfowl are now in full swing.

Robert A. Leeson, of Boston, chairman of the Board of "Duck's Unlimited" said that his headquarters in Boston had received word that cold weather in Southern Alberta and Saskatchewan had started the flights south and that ducks and geese in great numbers had left Manitoba for warmer quarters.

THE FISH and Wildlife Service, despite an outcry of disappointed duck hunters has ruled against extension of the shooting season.

The requests have been particularly numerous and insistent from Minnesota and Texas. Minnesota chose the earliest shooting season possible this year—October 6 through November 9.

The basis of their complaints is that the weather has been so unseasonably warm and calm that the birds have not taken to flight in any considerable numbers. The Maryland and Virginia seasons open at noon, November 27.

Iseeyou Wins Manly 'Chase At Middleburg

By Harry de Mawby, Jr.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., Nov. 11.—John M. Sciff's Iseeyou scored an upset today before 7500 fans in the thirtieth running of the Manly Steeplechase Handicap gaining an easy 2½-length victory over Rigan McKinney's Banner Waves, another rank outsider, in the feature attraction of the concluding meeting of the National Hunt Races held on the Glenwood Park Race Course.

Iseeyou, under the capable handling of veteran 'chase rider Harry Harris, took command going to the fourth fence of the 13-obstacle course and was never seriously threatened for the lead. He withstood challenges of Banner Waves and Trough Hill, Mrs. Stephen C. Clark's favorite, and the brisk early leader Hampton Roads, winner of Tuesday's Battleship Steeplechase.

The favored Trough Hill ran a good even race for Tommy Field but faded under pressure in the last half-mile.

Maj. Gen. Richard K. Mellon saw his color bearers Trout Brook and Artic Fox account for the days flat offerings with F. D. Adams guiding Trout Brook through the pace setters to earn a 2-length triumph in the Far Hills, and "Paddy" Smithwick pushing Artic Fox to a 1-length win over the mile course in the closing Monkton attraction.

Redskins Play Eagles

Gilmer Out, Baugh To Direct Team

REDSKINS—From P 1-C

day when the Redskins can win. With the exception of veteran Center Alex Wojciechowicz, whose ailing shoulder will probably limit his action, the Philadephians are in tip-top shape.

The Redskins, on the other hand, definitely aren't. Harry Gilmer is still nursing a shoulder separation and probably won't play; Fullback Pete Stout, a defensive regular, is definitely out with a bad leg and Tackle Bob Hendren and End Danny Brown have assorted wounds which have placed them on the "extremely doubtful" list.

With Gilmer on the bench, Sammy Baugh, who has played every second on offense since Gilmer was injured three weeks ago, again will direct the team. Baugh, relegated to a substitute role by Gilmer, stepped in for the former Alabama star against these same Eagles on October 29 and before the afternoon was over the 36-year-old passing star had experienced his worst afternoon in 14 years of professional football.

Three of his last quarter passes boomberanged on him and in 2½ minutes the Eagles converted a 14-3 lead into a 35-3 rout.

Baugh himself is not in the best of shape. He still favors a chipped bone in the elbow of his throwing arm and must pass side-armed instead of overhanded.

Justice, who got off a 71-yard run against the Eagles in that 35-3 affair, Bill Dudley and Bob Goode round out Coach Herman Ball's varsity backfield. With Stout out, Goode will probably have to go 60 minutes.

The Eagles, whose 9-7 loss to the Steelers last Sunday forced them to relinquish the American Conference lead to Cleveland, will be striking at the Redskins with their old guard—Steve Van Buren and Tommy Thompson — plus something new in the person of Halfback Dan Sandifer, who joined them only Friday.

Sandifer wore Redskins' livery last year but was traded to Detroit for Dudley and subsequently to San Francisco. He resented the deal which removed him from the Washington scene and can be expected to play just a bit harder than usual against his former team mates.

Parker-Gray Fetes Lloyd at Caps' Game Tuesday

Earl Lloyd, Caps' forward, will be honored at halftime of the Caps-New-York game at Uline Arena Tuesday night.

Lloyd, who graduated from Parker-Gray High in Alexandria before entering West Virginia State, will be making his last start with the Caps before induction into the Army Thursday.

The faculty, athletic staff, basketball team and students of Parker-Gray will join in tribute to Lloyd.

Today's Games:

Baltimore at Pittsburgh.
Chicago Cardinals at New York Giants.
Los Angeles vs. Green Bay at Milwaukee.
New York Yankees at Chicago Bears.
Philadelphia at Washington.
San Francisco at Cleveland.

Wright Choice Over Keene

Julian Keene, classy local light heavyweight boxer, will tackle Chubby Wright, Reading, Pa., in the ten round main event at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Keene's backers are trying to get a title shot at Titleholder Joey Maxim for him and his showing against Wright will have a lot of bearing on his chances. Keene is a 7-5 underdog against Wright.

Keene kayoed Indian Chief Red Arrow in his last fight three weeks ago.

In the semifinal, Roland Randall will meet Harry Koonce in a five rounder. Both are local lightheavys. Another five rounder brings together lightweights Kenny Leach of Baltimore and Bernard Boxdale, of the same city.

A trio of four round bouts lists Jimmy Sewell and Paddy Bullock, lightweights; Ape Kaiser and Young Satan, welters, and Billy Roach, of Baltimore, vs. Kid Toy, welters.

Catholic Loses Finale, 25-7

Long Drives Bring Win To Sho'men

By Ed Herbert

CHESTERTOWN, Md., Nov. 11. Catholic University closed out its football season by bowing to Washington College, 25-7, in a Mason-Dixon Conference game here today. The Cardinals finished with two victories, three defeats and a tie.

C. U. held the lead once, 7-6, in the first quarter, after Willie Poms went for a score on a 10-yard plunge through the center, and then added the placement.

Washington jumped to a 6-0 advantage early in the same quarter when Catholic took the kickoff on its own 31, but couldn't get started. Washington took over and Harry Miller went over from 1 yard out. John Wilson missed the extra point try.

The teams battled on even terms the rest of the first half. Midway in the third period, though, the Sho'men scored on a drive of 67 yards, culminated when Wilson, the split-T quarterback, scored from three out on the keep.

When Wilson added the conversions Washington had the lead, 13-7.

Two fourth quarter touchdowns by the Sho'men finished the day's scoring. They marched 68 yards early in the period, 46 yards being gained on a Wilson-Miller aerial that carried to the Catholic 2, where Bucky Ennis brought Miller down from behind.

Wilson scored on a quarterback sneak from the 1-foot line, on the sixth play of the drive. Wilson missed the conversion again.

Wilson hit Miller once more late in the game for 38 yards and the final Washington tally.

Washington has won five games and lost two.

Bolt's 70 Ties Marusic With Fazio 4 Back

SAVANNAH, Ga., Nov. 11 (AP).—Tommy Bolt, young pro from Durham, N. C., shot a two-under-par 70 today to deadlock Milon Marusic of Albany, N. Y., at the end of three rounds in Savannah's $10,000 open golf tournament.

Bolt and Marusic had seven under par 209's going into Sunday's final round, and one stroke margins over Jim Ferrier of San Francisco.

For the first time in the tournament, Marusic went over par and carded a 73. He bogied five holes and birdied four over the 6762-yard General Oglethorpe course.

Bolt meantime, closed a three-stroke gap and edged up from a third place tie. He went out in two under par with 34 and returned with 36.

Willie Goggin of White Plains, N. Y., and Felice Torza of St. Charles, Ill., remained within striking distance with 211 and 212, respectively.

Marty Furgol of North Hollywood, Calif., and George Fazio, Washington, D. C., turned in 2138.

Amateur Dick Chapman of Pinehurst, N. C., continued to head his division with 218, three strokes ahead of Jack Coyle, Springfield, Ill., and four up on Frank Stranahan, Toledo, Ohio, and Hobart Manley of Savannah.

Chapman annexed his first hole-in-one of his career, driving home a five-iron on the 195-yard sixteenth hole. The day's best round was a 68, by Dutch Harrison, St. Andrews, Ill.

G. W. Ground Game Throttles Furman

Big Ed Jasonek, fifteenth ranking ground gainer, and his halfback running mate, Sonny Horton, gave G. W. plenty of trouble, as expected. Jasonek got 74 yards in 16 running tries, and Horton set up a Jasonek's 2-yard touchdown buck with a smart 26-yard run.

three-game Southern Conference losing streak and brought its record to 4-3. G. W. also dropped a non-league affair to Virginia.

Furman has lost six, won two and tied one.

The thing that G.W. didn't expect was a well organized Furman pass defense. In the first half, the Hurricane defensive backs, led by Charlie Thomas and Lamon Moates, batted down five of Davis' 10 first-half passes, and intercepted one each.

Moates also picked off a Cilento pass to help bring on Furman's only touchdown.

After showing only 5 completions in 13 passing tries in the first half, G.W. threw only once in the entire second half, a tactical revolution as far as G.W. is concerned.

GW's pass defense was pretty special, too. Against defensive backs Davis, George Smkew, Jack Tivnan, Joe Kennelly and Pete Cordelli, Furman could complete only one out of 14 passes. The Colonials intercepted five.

GW's ground attach showed promise from the outset. Mostly by land, GW moved 33 and 66 yards in two early drives which fizzled on Furman's 38 ano 20-yard lines.

Cilento Goes Over

On their third chance, G.W. rolled 72 yards before Cilento cracked over left tackle to score from the two. John Shullenbarger's placement was wide.

Furman came right back moments later when Moates intercepted Cilento's toss at midfield and returned it to G.W.'s 29. On a cleverly executed reverse, Horton took the ball from Jasonek, sucked in the left side of G.W.'s line and streaked to G.W.'s three. Jasonek went over from the two, carrying defender Kline with him.

Quarterback Joe Watts converted, and Furman led the stunned visitors 7-6.

At intermission somebody applied some sort of psychology on the Colonials for they came out for the second half full of bounce.

Early in the third quarter, end Tom England slammed hard into Furman halfback Tommy Williams. The ball flipped out in the open, and G. W.'s Lou Ciarracca fell on it at Furman's 49. From there G. W. went on to score. The only second half G. W. pass, Davis to Butler, was good for 22 yards, and Barreira sprinted around left end for the touchdown.

Colonials Take Lead

Shullenbarber converted for the first of four times, and G. W. was in the lead, 13-7, to stay.

The game started to break wide open in the fourth quarter, when Furman punter, Ervin Shook, held the ball on fourth down believing a penalty had been called against G. W.

He guessed wrong, and the Colonials had the ball at Furman's 35. Soon afterward, Cilento scored his second touchdown from the 1.

Next time the Colonials got the ball they went 58 yards to score. Kline, on a reverse, got a nice block from Dave Shiver, circled left end, reversed his field and streaked 37 yards for a touchdown.

With darkness setting in and 3000 folks filing out of the stands, G. W. moved 40 more yards to score, Cilento getting No. 3 from the 2.

NAVY—From Page 1-C

Green Wave Rocks Navy

eron left Navy with dismal record of four completions of their 26 passes of the day.

Whenever the Middies stalled Tulane's ground attack, Ernst merely aimed a pass at Shinn, a prize faker on the flanks, who loped, feinted, galloped and button-hooked to panic the Navy defenders.

Harold Waggoner, who teamed with George Kinek and Ronnie Kent in Tulane's running attack, cracked over from close up for the Greenies' first two touchdowns. Ernst pulled a switch on Navy's pass defenders to hit his other end, Gale Kirkpatrick, for Tulane's third quarter touchdown and in the final period the Greenies scored on an intercepted pass.

That stroke produced the longest run of the day and the final humiliation for Navy. Zastrow aimed a pass at Ballinger and Defensive Fullback Bobby Jones jumped out of the weeds on the Tulane 18 to gather it in. He streaked 82 yards up the sidelines to go all the way.

The Middies, first mistake was their election to kick off after winning the toss, and Tulane was not long in striking. Ernst floated a long pass down the middle to Kinek who wrenched away from Hauff and completed a 57-yard gain on the Middies' 14 before Botula grabbed him from behind.

Bob McDonald stopped two Tulane smashes at the tackles, but on fourth down Waggoner took a handoff from Ernst and slipped outside right tackle for the last three yards. Bannerman blocked Comeauz's place kick for the extra point, but Navy was off side. His second kick was batted down legitimately by Fischer.

The Middies, helpless to move the ball, gained a total of only 4 yards in that first quarter. Tulane drove all the way from its own four toward another touchdown but muffed it when Kinek, after taking a pass from Ernst, wasn't satisfied with a first down on the Navy 12, tried to cut back and lost ground that cost Tulane the ball on fourth down.

The Middies rose up to take the ball away from Tulane on the Navy 10 before the first period ended, and early in the second quarter, Steele pounced on Kinek's fumble to thwart another touchdown bid of the Greenies, after Shinn took a 12-yard pass to the Navy 15.

On the succeeding play, though, Wilner fumbled for Navy and Jones recovered for Tulane on the Middies' 19. It set up Tulane's second score. Waggoner clicked off 10 yards up the middle, and then added the last 3 on a cut-back play through tackle after faking wide.

Navy's only serious offensive gesture of the first half was in the last minute of play when Zastrow hit Vines with a pass that carried 52 yards to the Tulane 42.

Ernst's pass to Shinn started a Tulane touchdown drive in the third quarter and then he pitched a 13-yarder to Kirkpatrick before hitting the same lad with a 10-yard scoring pass that Kirkpatrick took on the 4 and toted home with one large stride.

The Middies narrowly averted another Tulane touchdown in the fourth quarter when a 70-yard trek that included 41-yard Ernst-to-Shinn pass wound up with Bonar fumbling the ball on a quarterback sneak across the goal line. Steele fell on the ball for Navy to convert the apparent score into a touch-back.

So fierce was the line play that Dick Fischer and Bob Denfeld, Navy guards who tangled with the mastodons in Tulane line, were both forced out of the game with gory facial injuries.

At one point in the fourth quarter, the game developed into a ludicrously-loose affair, with the ball changing hands four times within the span of five plays. Kinek intercepted a Navy pass, and on the next play, Bannerman recovered a fumble by Kent. Ten seconds later Bannerman fumbled, and 280-pound Jerome Helluin recovered for Tulane. Navy's interception of a pass followed, and when Navy punted, a fumble by Kingery gave Navy the ball again.

She Brightens the Ward—and Her Spirits Too

NURSE'S AIDE—T. L. C., Tender, loving care, is what the nurse's aides call it at Walter Reed and many another hospital, and it's just what the doctor prescribed. It means those extra little attentions . . . stopping by a patient's bed to chat about his health, or the weather . . . fixing a pillow behind his head, or smoothing the sheets. Nurse's Aides Bring Cheer, Care to Walter Reed Wounded

By Dorothea Cruger

"IT REALLY gives you a lift!"

That's how Mrs. Kathleen Mercurio feels about the 16 hours a week she spends as a nurse's aide at Walter Reed Hospital. "In fact," she says, "I wish my little girls were older so I could give a lot more time to it."

Kathy Mercurio, a widow with two small children, was one of the 16 women who answered a recent Red Cross appeal for daytime nurse's aides. These volunteers spent 40 hours in class learning nursing techniques, then went on the wards at Walter Reed for 40 hours of on-the-job training. And several of the patients they had worked with in these "practice sessions" were on hand to watch them receive their caps in graduation ceremonies last Monday.

If you ask any of the 15 young women who graduated with Kathy in the first nurse's aides class at the hospital since the war, you'll find they're just as enthusiastic as she is about the work.

For Kathy, it's the patients in the wards, their "amazing cheerfulness," their teasing and their jokes that make her look forward to the days she spends as a nurse's aide. On Ward 9-B, where she spends much of her time, there are about 30 boys, "really just kids," some of them Korean casualties who are partially paralyzed, and forced to lie flat on their stomachs or backs for months. But in spite of their long illness and the monotony of hospital life, they're always good-humored and ready with a crack.

THERE'S "STU" KAH, of Tampa, Fla., for instance. Seriously injured in a car accident 15 months ago, he's been flat on his stomach ever since. On Kathy's first day on the ward he asked her right off where she was from, and on hearing it was Washington, his face lit up. "You a rebel, too?" he cried, whipping out a Confederate flag from under his pillow. Loud jeers from neighboring patriots caused a strategic withdrawal of the colors.

Then there's Bob Shepherd of Clark Mills, N. Y., who suffered a shattered spine, broken ribs and other injuries in Korea. But, head propped in a sling, he studies for a high school diploma from correspondence school booklets on a shelf below him. He's learning to write with his left hand, too, since his right shoulder was badly hurt.

"Gene" Aaronson of Stewart Manor, N. Y., though partially paralyzed, is especially good at giving Kathy a "hard time." While she was still a beginner at pulse-taking, he accused her of taking an extra long time so she could hold his hand.

EVEN IF SHE WANTED TO, Kathy wouldn't have much time for hand-holding. From 8 a. m., when she arrives on the ward, to 4 p. m, when she reluctantly leaves, she's always busy, rubbing backs, fixing pillows, giving shampoos, taking temperatures and pulse counts and giving foot care. On her ward, where most of the boys haven't walked for months, it's vital that their feet be kept limber and in good shape for the day when they get back up.

"One fellow had feet like an elephant's hide when I first started to work with him," says Kathy, "but in just a month they're nearly back to normal. Just a little thing like that makes me feel I'm accomplishing something."

This feeling that she's acomplishing something expresses Kathy's whole joy in her work. Before she signed up last month, she had been "sitting around the house worrying about my troubles." She was widowed two years ago when her husband, a World War II fighter pilot was killed in a National Guard plane crash, and had been devoting her time to her two little girls, Susan, 4, and Jean, 6. But she felt she needed some outside interest, and it was just at this time that she heard a radio appeal for Red Cross volunteers. "I've been a different person since I answered that call. I even gained 10 pounds," she laughs.

AFTER REGISTERING at Red Cross headquarters, Kathy began classes at Walsh House, where she spent 40 hours learning nursing techniques under Mrs. Ruth Woods, former instructor of nurses at Emergency Hospital, and "a grand teacher." Next she and the 15 other women in her class spent 40 hours in the wards applying their knowledge in making beds, taking pulses, and learning how to lift patients without injuring themselves. Then came capping ceremonies at the hospital, and Kathy and her classmates were ready to give the 150 hours a year required by the Red Cross in return for the training.

Kathy, who's been a Red Cross booster ever since she started, won't have any trouble meeting this requirement. In fact, she's such an eager volunteer that she's trying to get the D. C. Air National Guard Wives Club, which she organized three years ago, into some group Red Cross activity. And she's still trying to find some way to give more time to nurse's aide work, since the need for daytime workers is so urgent.

It's a Dart to the Heart for Pretty Mrs. Nina Lunn, Sr.

By Marie McNair

THE TWO NINA LUNNS—mother and daughter—are so goodlooking and have so much charm that Cupid will ever stalk their trails.

A wedding in early December is in the offing for Nina, sr.; the bridegroom is Charles Leigh Stevens. But when and where the wedding, which will be the simplest kind of ceremony, will take place, neither Mrs. Lunn or Mr. Stevens have yet decided.

The blonde bride-to-be is the daughter of Mrs. Wallace H. White—also a Nina—whose husband was 30 years in Congress and was Majority Leader in the Senate when he retired. Nina, sr. is an H-bomb of energy. She's tremendously interested in health and nutrition and right now she's working on a column to be called "Hormones and Health" showing the relation of hormones to health and physical well-being. Nina, sr. is now staying with her daughter at her house on Dumbarton ave.

Mr. Stevens is an industrial engineer. A once-a-month visit to Cambridge, Mass. to speak to the seminar at the Harvard School of Business Administration, and other consulting engagements keep him pretty much on the go.

A special visit to Harvard last Tuesday was for the purpose of dedicating a portrait of the Dean of the Business Administration School, Donald K. Brown. Mr. Stevens had commissioned an artist to paint Dean Brown's picture.

Mr. Stephens owns a plantation at Yemassee, half way between Charleston and Savannah and not more than 20 miles from Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim's

Girl Who Describes Herself as Friendless In Her Native Land, Asks for Instructions On How to Remedy Her Plight and Do It Fast

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: What does an 18-year-old girl do when she wants some friends? Male or female, it makes no difference to me. All I want is some congenial company, and I want it quick.

I am the youngest of a large family; and all the children are less than 30 years of age. In spite of this I have only one boy friend for whom I'd really give a dime; and I have absolutely no girl friends. I am somewhat a case of being a stranger in my native land. It all sounds silly and contradictory, and yet it's true—and no fun at all for me.

I am healthy and not bad looking, although slightly hefty. I dance well. I am good at almost all sports, and due to the family I have a pronounced sense of humor. In short, outside of the fact that I am inclined to be fat, I am just like any other 18-year-old girl. Still I don't belong.

There is a gulf a mile wide between me and the boys and girls with whom I've grown up. I can never cross it. I am not sure I want to. We have nothing in common. They think I am peculiar because I once went to the opera; and they think all artists are nuts besides. I almost forgot to mention that I am studying to be a commercial artist. I suppose it sounds a little crazy and conceited to say it is they who are wrong, and not I; but that's my conviction, nevertheless. As a result I spend most of my evenings alone at home.

Something has got to be done. I want to have a good time while I am still young enough to enjoy myself; and I see no reason why I should miss it simply because I happen to have been born on the wrong street. I do hope you will be able to offer some suggestions. I have never written a letter of this type before, but I have decided to rise above self consciousness and ask your advice.

L. P.

DEAR L. P.: If you would add to the number of your friends, male and female, you must overcome a pronounced bias towards egotism and upstaging which characterizes your personality now. It is probably only an unconscious defense mechanism, stemming from the fact that you are youngest in a large family; and born (if you think so) on the wrong street; and inclined, as you say, to be hefty.

I am disposed to think your associates don't attach half the importance that you do to the fact that you once went to the opera, or that you are studying commercial art. It is your complacency, real or pretended, your conscious claims to superiority, rather than the facts about you, that irks other perhaps less ambitious young persons, and interposes a barrier between you and them.

For advice—please cast aside your self consciousness. Don't just make a theatrical gesture of doing so. There is no gulf a mile wide between yourself and other young people. There is only the transparent veil of your own determined desire to be thought different and superior. And I am sure (even if you aren't) that you do want to brush this barrier aside. If you didn't, you wouldn't be asking, tragi-comically, how to go about it.

There is no question here of "crossing a gulf." It's a matter of getting rid of that veil; or perhaps I should say, of letting fall from your shoulders a mantle of conceit, and standing forth in your true light. It appears that you are an intelligent talented young girl, concerned alike with having a wholesome good time, lots of real friends, and improving your social and cultural status in life. So just be yourself and your luck will change.

M. H.

GOING PLACES

By Evelyn Hayes

"It takes only two hours for her to pack to go anywhere—but it takes darn near 22 hours for her to make up her mind to pack," said a husband of his wife last week.

This bit of eavesdropping was especially interesting to me because I had just had a long talk with a girl who should know about travel clothes—Yvonne Findling of Alhambra, Calif., who has just returned from an air tour of Europe.

Although every travel wardrobe must include at least one suit, Miss Findling also believes every traveler should take at least one wool dress. The dress, she feels, should be of wool jersey or some such uncrushable fabric and should be simply styled so that it may be dressed up or down depending on the whim—and demand—of the moment.

All clothes in a travel wardrobe should be convertible—that is, clothes that can serve more than one purpose on the trip. This, of course, is the writer's favorite bit of fashion philosophy—whether the wardrobe is for travel or not. For example, a dress such as Tina Leser's plaid dress pictured here not only serves for day, filled in with blouse or jersey—but goes out smartly solo at night for dinner and/or dancing.

Accessories should also be versatile. A wool stole selected to wear with a bathing suit should be of a color and type that could double as an evening cover-up.

Always take a full length topcoat, says Miss Findling—like the one pictured from Lewis and Thomas Saltz—because a simple dark topcoat can top various costumes. Always wear a hat on the plane, too, because the easiest way to take a hat along is on your head. Take other hats, too—these to be soft and packable and the kind that can change character with clips or veils.

On the strictly practical side, this smart young lady strongly advises any traveler to take plenty of nylon hose and nylon underclothes. Their quick-dry, no press virtues add endless joy and hours of fun to any trip.

Stag Lines — Knit Ties Glean More Admirers

By Bert Bacharach

FASHION: There's increasingly widening interest in knit ties, which go so well with today's widespread collars. Radio and screen star Gordon MacRae wears a colorfully-striped crochet.

MOTOR HINTS: Have the locks on your car doors ever frozen up? If the weather is real bad, put strips of cellophane tape over the keyholes. . . . When your car won't start, because of flooding try this: Hold accelerator all the way down to the floor and then push starter button.

GADGETS: There's a thimble-like fingertip wrench that lets you hold and tighten nuts in otherwise inaccessible places. Set of four sizes, 39 cents. . . . The "Hang Over Clothes Hanger"—with a non-slip trouser bar built above the coat section, conforming to the order these garments are put on and taken off. $2.95. . . . The Handle Rod telescopic casting rod, a regulation length rod that folds into its 11-inch handle. Weighs six ounces and can be carried in pocket. $13.50.

HANDYMAN: Easiest way to pick up tiny particles of broken glass is to swab them up with moistened absorbent cotton. . . . To clean inside of a thermos bottle thoroughly—put in a tablespoon of uncooked rice and cup of warm water. Shake well.

WHAT'S YOUR SUIT TYPE? Should you wear a regular, short or long? Here's a guide for you to follow: 1. Short, if you're between 5'5" tall and your waist is 5" to 6" less than chest measurement. 2. Regular, 5'8" to 5'10", waist 5" to 7" less than chest. 3. Long, 6'1" to 6'3", waist 5" to 7" less than chest.

GOOD IDEA: Ed Fay, of Jamestown, N. Y., writes, "If you put packs of cigarettes in the refrigerator, they will stay fresh. Or if dried out, they will regain their freshness."

Experts Use Rouge Even If Color Is High

Fifth day of Blanche's beauty program

By Ann Lawrence

WHY ROUGE WHEN my own color is so high, Blanche asked?

True, she did not need to rouge her face before her new foundation was applied. But once the skin's florid color had been toned down, to be replaced by the rachel-ivory tint, the slightest suspicion of rouge would help to give her skin that bloom-of-youth look.

Correctly placed at the highest and widest part of her cheekbones, then blended in to the outer edge of her eye, the color spot would serve to narrow this broad part of her face.

IN APPLYING the rouge, a rectangular patch of color was formed, starting on top of the cheekbone, almost at the hairline, then blended in and slightly down. The color stopped about half an inch to the side of her nose and faded off just under the lowest part of the cheekbone.

The final step in Blanche's make-up for make-over was the powdering. Yes, she had formerly used powder, but the color was wrong for her complexion — a pink shade that only emphasized her ruddy skin tones. An ivory rachel powder, one shade lighter than her foundation would complete the "toning down" process which began with the powder base.

LEARNING TO PUT her face powder on properly was another new experience for Blanche. We gave her a cotton swatch heavily coated wiht powder and had her pat over her entire face, covering the eyebrows, eye lashes and her mouth. Then, with a second swatch, she learned a good trick for the budget-minded; to tear off a sheet of wax paper and hold it directly under her chin when brushing off the extra powder. The excess caught by the paper can then be poured back into the powder box and used all over again.

Now, with a lipstick brush, Blanche went back over her mouth for a second time, a simple step since the shape of the mouth had already been formed. Then with an eyebrow brush she carefully dusted the powder from her brows and lashes.

Why powder over the mouth and eye area, she inquired, if it has to be brushed away? This over-all powdering, we explained, makes certain that there is a light film of powder over the whole face, without a patch of foundation to show through and mar the mat-like finish.

Tomorrow: To Erase the Double Chin.

Mrs. Vandenberg Has a Magic Touch in Homemaking

By Elizabeth Maguire

IN ONE OF THE OLDEST forts around Washington lives the Chief of Staff of the newest branch of the armed services. Gen. Hoyt Sanford Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force, and his pretty wife reside at Fort Myer, their eighteenth home in 27 years of marriage.

Like other wives in the Air Force service, Mrs. Vandenberg knows what it means to move frequently. Fortunately for her, interior decorating is her hobby and for that reason she loves to move.

"I like to put the same old stuff down in a new place and see how it does," she says. Their house at Fort Myer is old and unpretentious, but Mrs. Vandenberg's magic touch has made it extremely smart and attractive inside.

EVEN THE OLD BRICK PORCH is perked up considerably with original sketches on the walls by Mrs. Vandenberg. Two yellow fish peer around a corner at a frolicsome seahorse in chartreuse green. In between grows a coral colored tree and alongside the wall is a bamboo bar.

The house commands an expansive view of Washington from a hill which used to be part of the Arlington estate belonging to the Custis Lee family. Fort Myer, originally called Fort Whipple, was established in 1863 for the defense of the Capital during the Civil War. It was redesignated Fort Myer in 1881, being named after Brig. Gen. Albert J. Myer, chief signal officer of the Army.

The parade ground plays an important part in aviation history, as it was there the Wright brothers held their first public demonstration in 1909, after private experiments at Kitty Hawk, N. C., and Dayton, Ohio. Lieut. T. E. Selfridge was killed at Fort Myer while flying with Orville Wright, and a small monument on the spot commemorates this pioneer of aviation.

MRS. VANDENBERG ENJOYS flying and her handsome son at West Point asks nothing more of life than to become an aviator. Cadet Vandenberg, jr., 6 feet, 3 inches, will graduate in June.

A daughter, the former Gloria Vandenberg, is now Mrs. Robert Miller, mother of little Susan Hoyt Miller, age 3.

The general and his wife, besides being one of the handsomest pairs about, are also one of the happiest, although their happiness is not founded on mutual interests. He likes to hunt and shoot and she likes to collect antiques. He has a yen for golf and she has a flair for decorating.

THEY LIKE TO PARTY together, however, and make a pleasing addition to any gathering. "When you're an Air Force wife," says Mrs. Vandenberg, "you and your husband are separated so frequently that you appreciate the time you can spend together. I'm the apple of his eye and I know he's the apple of mine."

When the general returned from a recent visit to Japan, he brought back with him two beautiful screens in gold and misty silver, which now adorn the diningroom of the house at Fort Myer. And when Mrs. Vandenberg returned with the general from a recent visit to Paris, France, she brought with her hats and dresses, which she wears with great style.

Mrs. Vandenberg's principal interest, next to her family, is the Air Force Officers' Wives Club of which she is honorary president. Much of her time is given to the club's activities, including several committees which were formed at her suggestion; such as the motor pool, the clothing committee, the Arlington committee to assist Air Force people in time of bereavement and the hospital liaison committee to supply needed items to Air Force personnel who are patients in various hospitals.

Your Figure, Madame

In Diet, It's Not the Cost But the Upkeep

By Ida Jean Kain

"I WOULDN'T MIND reducing if I didn't turn around and put it all back again," overweights confide. "Why, I've been losing the same 10 pounds for 20 years . . . not exactly the same, maybe, but it might as well be!"

Ida Jean Kain

The blushing truth is that some dieters do turn right around and regain the lost pounds as fast as they took them off, or faster. Others regain weight after a few months' time has elapsed. Why? . . . is the size 20 question. It's easy to figure out . . . they continue to think like overweights and put overeating ahead of their figures.

Look at it this way. The real secret of keeping slim is to change food habits. But that's just it . . . you don't do much toward forming new food habits until you change your thinking. Having lost the excess pounds, face it—do you really want to stay at normal weight? Immediately your answer is YES. But which do you want most—to keep your good figure or lapse back into your old fattening way of eating? Here, as in everything else, you can't have your cake and eat it too.

AT THIS POINT you are likely to counter with: "Do I always have to diet?" That is confusing the issue. The choice is not between continuing to diet or regaining the lost weight . . . you no longer have to stay on a diet. The choice is this—going back to overeating or staying at normal weight. You can have good food and normal weight, too, but you can't go back to overeating.

HOW TO CHANGE and think like a slim, attractive woman? You do it by appreciating the science of nutrition that enables you to keep your figure, stay younger longer and be in the pink of condition.

He's a Royal Chatterbox

Prince Charles, Going on 2, Has His Say

By Alvin J. Steinkoff

LONDON, Nov. 11 (AP).—Prince Charles, who is in line to be King of England some day, is a chatterbox at the age of 2.

November 14 is his birthday and on this big occasion the little prince is sure to have much to say. A good deal of his prattle will be perfectly understandable to his elders, including King George VI and the Queens who are his grandmother and great-grandmother.

But at the age of 2, Charles gets some things mixed up. He thinks a magpie is a ship and he is at least half right.

"Magpie" is one of the first words he learned to say and when he uses it he does not mean the greedy bird which stalks about in English fields looking for shiny objects. The prince means the frigate Magpie of the British navy, the ship of which his father, the Duke of Edinburgh, is commanding officer. The prince has heard all about the ship.

HOW IS THE PRINCE now that he has reached the splendid age of 2? At Clarence House on the Mall, his London home, the answer is:

"He's a normal child. If he's at all different from other little English boys it may be that he's a little livelier, a little taller for his age, a little noisier and he is scared of nothing."

He is a scamperer and in another year or so he is going to be a hard fellow to catch among the bushes at Balmoral. He is fair and blue-eyed and his hair doesn't like to stay combed. Experienced nurses predict that he will not be quite as fair as his father and that his coloring and possibly his features will be more like those of Princess Elizabeth.

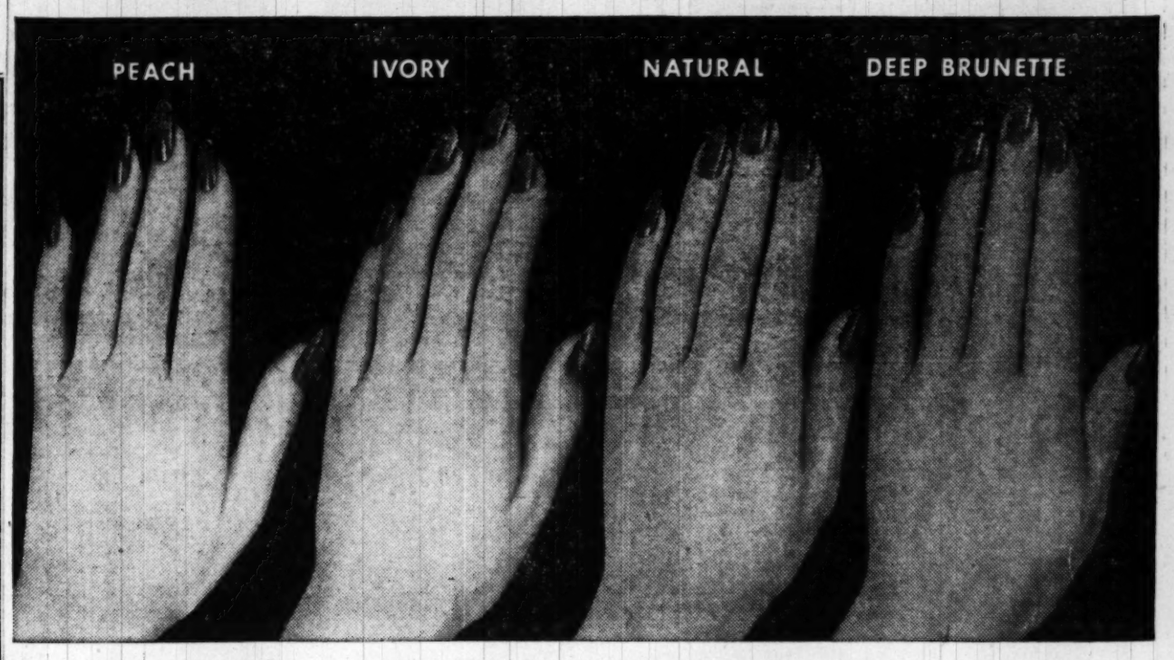
CHOOSE THE SHADE OF HAND BEAUTY YOU WANT



New No-Rub-Off Hand Make-Up
Glorifies Even Red, Rough Knuckles in 10 Seconds

Now comes an utterly different kind of make-up designed especially for your hands! A natural-looking no-rub-off make-up that glorifies even "Hopeless" hands in only 10 seconds!

No more red, unsightly hands or knuckles. No more "work-worn look" or redness.

Immediately—redness, blemishes and brown spots are toned down and blended out: Age-revealing veins and imperfections are concealed to an amazing degree. Your whole hand is instantly glamorized in a way impossible up to now.

This new creation is called Lady Esther HANDS-UP—A delightfully delicate cream that comes in 4 exquisite colors that enable you to choose the exact shade of hand beauty you desire.

Won't Rub Off On Clothes

HANDS-UP is non-sticky; quick-drying—WON'T RUB OFF on clothes or gloves: Stays on until you wash it off! So it is ideal, too, for neck and shoulders.

Miracle Softening-Action

In HANDS-UP I have added a rare, imported ingredient—concentrated lanolin—for speedy skin-softening action: A new form of lanolin that is 2½ times richer than found in hand preparations previously used.

Thus, HANDS-UP not only endows your hands with new beauty instantly—but acts rapidly to soften and smooth your skin every flattering hour you wear it!

Applied in the daytime, HANDS-UP works continuously to offset the coarsening effects of housework and weather. Applied at bedtime, it exerts its gentle skin-smoothing action all night long—to counteract roughness and dryness.

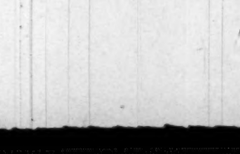
Yes, with my new HANDS-UP, I guarantee you'll never need any other hand preparation of any kind. For HANDS-UP is the first complete and instant hand-beautifier the world has ever known! . . . At all cosmetic counters. Two sizes, 49¢ and 98¢, plus tax.

4 Flattering Shades
- PEACH—delicate finish for the lightest-toned skin.
- IVORY—ivory-like beauty for light to medium toned skin.
- NATURAL—a flawless look for all medium skin tones.
- DEEP BRUNETTE—sun-tawny finish for olive skin tones.

TRY IT FREE—at leading stores

Because my HANDS-UP is so new it is hard to believe how much beauty it adds even to the loveliest hands. So I invite you to try it free—at any leading drug or department store. Stores have a special supply for this purpose. So simply ask for a free demonstration of HANDS-UP today!

Smooths Hands Overnight



Prove Its Miracle Softening-Action Tonight

Tonight, before you go to bed, smooth my new HANDS-UP on your right hand only. Note the instant transformation. See how redness disappears, even from knuckles. See how freckles and blemishes are toned down and blended out.

In the morning, compare the difference in the way your two hands FEEL. Notice how much softer and smoother the right hand has become just overnight.

This is positive proof of the DOUBLE beautifying action of my new HANDS-UP:—(1) Instant new hand-loveliness the moment you apply it. (2) Continuous skin protection and softening every hour you wear it!

Tooting Somebody Else's Horn? It's One Good Way To Deck a Gift Package

EVEN IF IT'S ONLY the "tin" anniversary, you can introduce a bit of glamor into your wrapping of the gift, C. G. writes:

DEAR ANNE:

A couple we know will celebrate their tenth wedding anniversary soon. We have bought a very pretty painted tin box and would like suggestions for wrapping it attractively for the occasion. C. G., Washington.

Tie up the box in tin foil, aluminum foil, or other metallic paper. Use metallic ribbon, too, possibly in a color. In the bow, slip some little tin article—a tiny tin horn to celebrate the occasion, a cookie cutter in appropriate shape, a cluster of little bells or something of the kind.

DEAR ANNE:

Is there any attachment for a home sewing machine that will turn out a professional-looking monogram on my husband's shirts? Do you need special patterns for these monograms? If so, where in Washington could I obtain them? MRS. J. M., Charlottesville, Va.

Apparently, there isn't an attachment made for this specific purpose. The button-hole maker can be used, but it takes great patience to develop the skill necessary to make a professional-looking monogram with it. People who give sewing machine instructions can show you how, but you will have to do much practicing on your own. Embroidery sections of department stores sell transfers for monograms.

Have you thought of buying ready-made monograms and sewing them on the shirts? Saves a lot of trouble!

DEAR ANNE:

Please let me know where I can get the dye-removing preparation recently mentioned in your column. MRS. E. R. S., Washington, D. C.

This dye-stripping agent is made by companies that manufacture home dyes. You can get both the dyes and the bleach in most drug stores and in 3 and 10c stores, too.

DEAR ANNE:

Can you tell me what is wrong with my muffins? I have a recipe that sometimes turns out perfectly beautifully, while on other occasions the muffins are tough and full of air holes. E. L. J., Culpeper, Va.

Muffins require a gentle hand in the mixing. Too much beating could be the cause of your trouble, assuming that you measure exactly and have the oven temperature right. The General Electric Consumer Institute conducted some research of this subject, and issued a very precise recipe prescribing the number of mixing strokes. They found that just 10 more strokes could change the quality of the muffins, while 30 more made tough muffins, peaked unattractively and riddled with air holes. This recipe may be helpful to you, since it is so exact:

PERFECT MUFFINS

1 egg, unbeaten
1 cup milk
¼ cup melted shortening
2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons sugar
3 teaspoons double-action baking powder
½ teaspoon salt

Put egg, milk, and shortening in medium-sized mixing bowl and beat with a small kitchen fork for 100 strokes. Sift dry ingredients evenly over the surface of the liquid ingredients, and gently mix with small kitchen spoon for 25 strokes. Carefully place batter in greased, shallow muffin cups. Bake in oven 425 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes. Makes 12 muffins.

Thousands of Apartments Coming on Greater Washington Scene

Built and building—there you have the story of postwar area apartment construction. These are the 925-unit District Heights Apartments in nearby Maryland, of which 250 are finished and occupied

Builders Confident They'll Fill Them

By Robert P. Jordan

THOUSANDS completed, thousands coming—and no apparent lack of tenants of fill most of them.

That's the word on apartments in Greater Washington, according to Government housing officials, builders and real estate men.

Sometime next spring, the great part of the huge postwar apartment construction program will grind to a halt. When it does, Federal Housing Administration statistics show that nearly 43,000 individual apartments will have been built with FHA mortgage insurance.

Those 43,000 units represent most of the apartment construction in this area since mid-1946. Right now, a total of 27,232 units in 285 different developments has been built and occupied since then. In 91 other projects, construction is in various stages on 15,622 units.

And five applications for FHA mortgage insurance now being processed total 2639 units.

An FHA spokesman said yesterday that present indications offer no reason to believe that apartment units now coming on the market will not be absorbed. Actually, he said, an unknown number of the 15,622 units listed as in various stages of construction have been completed and occupied.

DESPITE RUMORS that sponsors of a few outlying projects have had to give up the developments for lack of tenants, he reported that FHA has had no defaults on mortgages it has insured for apartment construction. Only in isolated instances has the occupancy level been too low to pay a profit.

He said that the building program should be rounded out by next May.

Over at the District Veterans Service Center, 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw., a total of 4787 dwelling units was listed Thursday as available for occupancy. Of these, 4347 units were in new apartments, the remainder in existing dwellings.

At the end of last April, however, the center's listings totaled more than 7000 new apartments.

According to Mrs. Mary B. Mahoney, supervisor of housing, an average of 75 families request the center's assistance daily in finding a place to live. Most want a two-bedroom unit, she said, but can pay only from $40 to $70 a month. Cheapest two-bedroom unit listed Thursday was $79.

MRS. MAHONEY said that there has been an increase recently in requests by Federal agencies and the armed forces for aid in housing incoming employes and servicemen.

One well-known builder-realtor, Waverly Taylor, said that it's the influx of Federal employes that will bring apartment projects now under construction to full occupancy upon completion.

Taylor is building the 485-unit Whitehaven apartments at 2500 Wisconsin ave. nw. He expects to move in the first tenants in the latter part of January. The nine-story structure has been under construction since the fall of 1949. Rentals range from $85 for efficiencies to $130 for one-bedroom units.

He said he anticipates no difficulty in filling the luxury-type apartment house now—but that he might have had some had it been finished before the "semiwar economy" took over, bringing more apartment seekers to Washington.

To Taylor, it doesn't look like rents will be coming down. Any reduction now, he said, is a "distress reduction," and not a "sound and healthy" one.

"I can't see rents coming down because costs are still going up," he declared. He said that labor wage increases force construction costs up, and that this, in turn, is reflected in higher rentals.

For a suburban garden-type project, consider the District Heights Apartments in District Heights, Prince Georges County. This 925-unit development was begun in October, 1949. Now, 250 units are built and occupied; the remainder will be completed by next April.

And Dr. S. Dewey Gottlieb, one of the three owners, confidently expects it will be fully occupied shortly after construction ends. He cited an attractive rental scale for forthcoming units as a tenant puller: $57.50 plus utilities for a one-bedroom unit; $67.50 plus utilities for a two-bedroom apartment.

WILLIAM MAGAZINE, president of Standard Construction Co., Inc., heads up an organization that is now building hundreds of apartment units.

His company will complete the 802-unit Berkshire Apartments, Massachusetts ave. nw., near Ward Circle, next spring. The first two sections are occupied now. Nearby, the company is building a 138-unit apartment house.

At the same time, work is progressing on the Langley Park apartment project in Prince Georges County (1560 units, 1240 now finished and occupied, and the Willston Apartments in Arlington, 1400 units, more than half occupied).

Magazine predicted that tenants will have signed up for units in the nearby Virginia and Maryland projects even before they are completed. "We can't finish them fast enough," he said.

First tenants will move into the 485-unit Whitehaven Apartments in late January

The Berkshire—802 units, some occupied, all to be available soon

This Week In D. C. Real Estate

THE WASHINGTON BUILDING CONGRESS will celebrate its thirteenth birthday Monday at a luncheon meeting at 12:30 p. m. in the Williamsburg Room of the Mayflower Hotel.

William F. Nelson, president of the organization, has invited the 12 past presidents and the groups women members as special guests.

Principal speaker will be Thomas F. Murphy, treasurer of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers International Union of America. His topic will be "What Do the Unions Do With Their Money?"

WASHINGTON CHAPTER of the Producers' Council will present table top displays of hundreds of building materials at a buffet dinner at 5 p. m. Thursday at the Mayflower Hotel.

The building products show will depict up-to-date developments in the construction field—from stud welding to floor covering design.

According to Frank W. Youry, president of the Washington chapter, invitations have been sent to architects, engineers, designers and Federal officials.

MRS. NAOMI M. WORTHINGTON, executive secretary of the Montgomery County Real Estate Board, reports that the following realtors are attending the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Miami Beach:

President R. H. Best, George W. Robertson, Frank L. Hewitt, jr., R. P. Ripley, H. E. Thompson, jr., E. L. Dieudonne, William B. Wheeler, Claude A. Wood, Sam Eig, Carlton U. Trexler, and Ray Hunt. Mrs. Worthington also is attending the sessions.

This session marks a big step forward in slum clearance here. A preliminary advance of $170,185 was approved last week by Raymond M. Foley, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency (left), to go toward the District's slum clearance and urban redevelopment program. With Foley are Mark Lansburgh (center), chairman of the District Redevelopment Land Agency, and Nathaniel S. Keith, director of slum clearance and urban redevelopment, HHFA. The money will permit setting up of a staff for the land agency and finance surveys

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF HOME BUILDERS has asked that its president, Thomas P. Coogan of Miami, be permitted to testify "against the drastically restrictive effect" of the October 12 mortgage credit controls before the new Congressional "Watchdog" committee.

Set up under the National Defense Production Act of 1950, the committee is charged with observing the functioning of Federal agencies as they carry out the requirements of the act.

Apartment Construction Lags

Sharp Decline Reported in September Housing Starts

HOUSING starts in Greater Washington declined sharply in September, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday—even though the number of one-family homes put under construction hit a postwar high for the month.

The bureau's preliminary estimates show that builders started 1890 new dwelling units in September, a drop of 34 percent under the August volume.

While this was the greatest August-September decline on record, the decrease was due in large part to a severe slump in apartment construction starts. Only 280 rental units in two-or-more family structures were begun during September, compared with 860 in August and 2530 in September a year ago.

Construction starts of single-family homes declined to 1610 units in September from the June peak of 2500—but the September total surpassed the number of one-family houses begun in the same month of 1949.

As a matter of fact, the bureau pointed out, the number of single-family dwellings begun each month this year "has far surpassed" the total for the corresponding months of other years.

HOUSING ACTIVITY in September was maintained at a relatively high level, BLS said, because of the large backlog of commitments for one-family homes made in July and August.

But the permit volume in September, it noted, was down 37 percent from August. This record-breaking drop in the number of one-family units authorized "probably reflected the effects of existing and anticipated residential credit curbs," it said.

During the first nine months of this year, 20,880 dwelling units were put under construction, 15 percent below last year's volume for the same period. Only 21 percent of the new units started this year were rental type, compared with 71 percent for the first nine months of 1949.

Construction cost of one-family houses, as reported by builders, averaged $11,000 for the first nine months of this year, compared with $9,700 for the same period last year.

These averages, BLS emphasized, are for all new houses started, and do not reflect the construction cost of a typical house. Average construction cost is affected not only by changes in the cost of materials and labor, but also by variations in the size and design of the houses and the type of projects started.

October Construction Work Over U. S. Fell Off Pace

NEW CONSTRUCTION activity turned downward in October from the record rate which it maintained throughout the summer, according to the Labor Department's bureau of labor statistics and the construction division, Department of Commerce.

The total value of all types of new construction put in place during October amounted to about 2.7 billion dollars, 4 percent less than the September total.

A decline in the amount of private homebuilding was the principal cause for the drop in total construction activity, it was reported. Highway construction also declined, but most types of non-residential building, both private and public, increased over September levels.

Expansion of industrial and commercial building activity was particularly marked, reflecting the high rate at which contracts have been awarded during the past few months, the agencies said.

BEFORE THE DOWNTURN in private homebuilding in October, a new record had already been established this year for the number of new dwellings placed under construction. A total of more than 1,100,000 new nonfarm dwellings were started during the first nine months of 1950, compared with 1,025,000 in all of 1949 and the previous annual peak of 937,000 in 1925.

During the first 10 months of 1950, new construction with a total estimated value of 22.8 billion dollars was put in place—22 percent more than the total for the same period in 1949.

Nearly 9.5 billion dollars of the total for the first 10 months of this year was outlay for new nonfarm dwellings, 63 percent more than during the first 10 months of last year.

The amount of private non-residential building was up about 10 percent from last year, when the first 10 months are compared, and public construction was up about 8 percent.

$90,000,000 Investment

LOS ANGELES—A total of 11,100 housing units with an aggregate value of approximately $90 million is being financed this year in California by Investors Diversified Services, Inc., of Minneapolis, according to Earl E. Crabb, chairman and president of the company.

This investment represents nearly 45 percent of the company's total 1950 Nation-wide investment operation in the real estate-mortgage field, said Crabb.

Veterans Warned to Look Before They Leap

HOME-SEEKING veterans here were cautioned yesterday to be sure they fully understand any contract or other document they are asked to sign before risking a deposit or down payment on a house.

The admonishment came from the Veterans Administration's Washington regional office through Morgan B. Callahan, loan guaranty officer. He said it stemmed from an increasing number of inquiries from veterans who are experiencing difficulties in buying a home with the aid of a VA-guaranteed loan.

"In almost every case the fault lies in the veterans' failure to read and understand sales contracts, reservations to purchase when the construction is completed, and so on," Callahan reported.

Most of the complaints center upon "escalator" and "hostility" clauses included in sales agreements, or upon documents that veterans find are only reservations to purchase—not firm sales contracts, he said.

"Usually there is nothing illegal in the action of the seller, although in some cases the practices border on deception. However, the complaining veterans are convinced that they have been cheated, and expect VA to protect them."

Actually, there is little the VA can do once a veteran has entered into an agreement with a seller, Callahan pointed out. A contract or sales agreement is a private matter over which the VA has no control. Consequently, VA has repeatedly urged veterans to be careful and have all questions fully and clearly answered by the selling agency or other qualified counsel before entering into such agreements.

HERE ARE some of the situations veterans have reported to VA, as outlined by the loan guaranty officer:

1. The veteran signs a contract containing an "escalator" clause that permits the seller to pass on any justified increase VA may allow in the appraisal of reasonable value because of rising costs. The veteran, of course, is given the option of rescinding the contract and receiving a rebate on his deposit if he does not want to pay the higher price.

In many cases the seller tries to persuade the veteran to rescind the contract because he can sell the property to a nonveteran at a price higher than the VA appraisal of reasonable value. However, many veterans want the house even at the higher price; some ex-servicemen even ask VA to increase the appraisal value.

2. Another type of escalator clause provides that any increase in cost experienced by the builder may be passed on to the purchaser. It contains no mention of the VA appraisal of reasonable value.

If cost increases force the sales price above the VA appraisal figure, the veteran cannot obtain a GI loan and must resort to conventional financing. In some of these cases, the provisions of the contract allow the veteran only the choice of obtaining conventional financing or losing his deposit.

3. War or hostility clauses provide that, in the event the United States engages in hostilities with a foreign power, the contract may be voided and the deposit returned at the seller's option.

4. Reservations to buy upon completion of construction are offered in lieu of firm-price contracts by many builders and sales agents. In these cases the reservation usually specifies a price which the veteran expects to be the final sales price.

If the veteran read the paper carefully he would see that it stipulates a "contract" is to be executed at a later date, and in practice the price in the contract may be higher.

5. Unratified contracts have caused grief for many veterans. In these, the veteran signs a sales contract form and posts a deposit with the sales agent who signs the document as a receipt for the binder, and the veteran is given a copy of the paper at this time. However, the sales agent neglects to have the document ratified by the owner or builder.

Thus, a period time may elapse with the veteran believing he has a firm-contract when he only has a receipt for his deposit. This practice permits the seller to make it a valid contract if he chooses, but if costs rise he can refuse to ratify the contract and sell the house to the veteran or another party—at a higher price.

6. A FEW VETERANS have come to VA with reports that they have been "talked out" of firm contracts by sellers. The latter convince them that a new contract at a higher price must be negotiated because VA has made an upward adjustment of the reasonable value of the property. VA may have allowed a justified increase in the appraisal, but VA's action would have no legal bearing on the validity of a previously executed firm contract.

Callahan said he had requested that the members of the Washington Real Estate Board and Home Builders Association continue their efforts to explain provisions of sales agreements and other documents to veteran purchasers. He also has urged others allied with the building trades to lend their aid.

VA has published a pamphlet to help guide veterans seeking to purchase homes. The pamphlet, "To the Home-Buying Veteran," is available at VA's Washington regional office, 1825 H st. nw.

Painting Trick

To avoid spattering paint, place a piece of wire across the mouth of a galvanized steel pail. Attach the wire at both ends to the metal ears which hold the pail's handle in place. Use the wire for removing excess paint from paint brushes. The excess paint will fall back into the pail, not on flooring or carpets.

One-Pitch Roof Makes for Simplicity, Economy

THE HOUSE with a one-pitch roof is coming up fast as the successor to the ranch-style home.

The one-pitch roof is the best answer yet found to the problems of simplicity and economy in building. It is easier to plan, easier to build, and easier to live in.

Look at the economy you get. A one-pitch roof—whether flat or shed—serves as both roof and ceiling. It is easy to insulate, and does away with expensive gables, hips, and valleys. You save on lumber, on cutting labor, and on time.

Look at the extra comfort you get. You can make rooms whatever size and shape you want without having to fit them to the confines of a rectangular house.

THESE ADVANTAGES are illustrated by Better Homes & Gardens plan number 2011. This plan is unusual only in its use of space.

The living room serves both as the family room and "front parlor." It is large but takes up less space than if these were separate rooms. A low-pitched shed roof over this area rises slowly from the inside wall, until at the outside wall the ceiling is three and one-half feet higher than the rest of the house. This permits use of a band of windows nine feet high on the garden side.

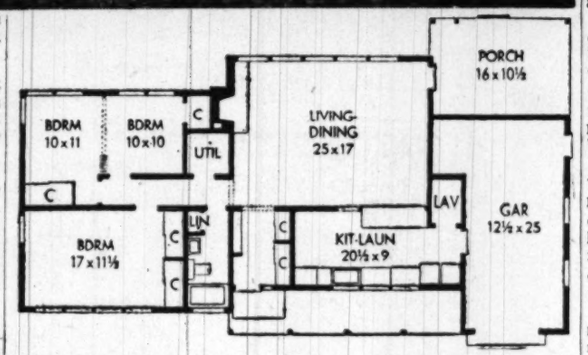
The kitchen is at the front, protected from direct sun by the entrance-porch overhang.

The garage is handy, and there is a small lavatory near the garage door. The house has no basement, but by eliminating the lavatory and workshop jog in the garage, you can easily run a basement stairway directly off the kitchen.

The owner's bedroom is spacious, while the other two are small. But by folding back an accordion door between rooms, you can turn the whole 200 square feet into a playroom.

Two other features of this house deserve mention. First, the screened porch—which is close enough to the kitchen to serve as a summer dining room and open on two sides. Second, the location of the heating plant. It shares a small space off the bedroom hall with the water heater.

Architect is Charles E. King, Belleville, Ill.



Prefab Sales Volume to Be High in '51

DESPITE a cutback in housing production anticipated under the national defense program, the country's makers of prefabricated homes expect a high sales volume in 1951.

This was the majority opinion of members of the Prefabricated Home Manufacturers' Institute expressed at their recent meeting in Milwaukee.

Arthur M. Weimer, dean of Indiana University's school of business, said the lower-price divisions of the housing market still hold real promise regardless of recently imposed credit restrictions and higher taxes. Predicting that retail prices would climb from 8 to 10 percent a year for the next two years, he said an increasing number of families would be buying homes as a hedge against inflation.

"The outlook for the prefabricated homes industry is unusually bright," Weimer said. He added that prefabricated home builders would not be faced in the coming year with the labor and material problems which will confront builders of conventional homes.

With the severest credit restrictions falling on costlier homes, many persons will become interested in lower-cost prefabricated homes because of the downpayment requirement, according to James R. Price of Lafayette, Ind., president of the institute.

In discussing preparedness measures for housing in all-out mobilization, Ralph R. Kaul, director of the housing and community facilities division of the National Security Resources Board, advised the industry to develop substitutes for critical housing materials.

Economists Predict Increase In Cost of Living Next Year

THE COST OF LIVING will increase moderately thru the first half of 1951 and will undergo only minor change thru the balance of the year.

Wholesale and retail prices will trend upward but not at runaway speed.

These are the majority opinions of a panel of business and academic economists whose viewpoints on the economic outlook for 1951 were gathered by the F. W. Dodge Corporation and published in the November issue of Architectural Record.

"Armed hostilities will not increase measurably in 1951," was the opinion of 92 out of 106 economists, while 11 disagreed and three gave no answer.

The Dodge firm, specialists in construction news and marketing, asked whether direct specific limitation orders, such as the Government recently placed on amusement and recreational construction, would be placed on other specified kinds of goods. The division of opinion was very close, and several declined to predict.

The tally by categories of goods was as follows, with the first number representing those who expect limitation orders on production, and the second figure representing those who do not:

Motor vehicles, 59 to 44; radio and television, 53 to 47; household equipment, 50 to 50; housing, 45 to 54; private nonresidential building, 42 to 56; and public construction, 34 to 63.

Probable dates of limitation orders, the article said, indicated by those who expect them, are the second quarter of 1951 for motor vehicles and house equipment, first quarter for radio and television sets and for various categories of construction.

Even the economists who foresaw no limitation orders predicted declines in production of consumer goods because of credit curbs and shortages of critical materials, although some members of the panel predicted there would be no declines. Others forecast cuts as high as 50 percent in household equipment, 50 percent in radio and television combined; and of 40 percent in non-military cars and trucks.

On the cost of living, the economists were asked their opinions as to changes in the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers price index which stood at 172.5 last July.

Their predictions: For December, 1950, range of expectations was 165-182 with a 175 median; for June, 1951, range was 167-200 with a 179 median; for December, 1951, range was 165-210 with a 180 median.

On the subject of rationing for consumers next year, 75 of the panel expect it, 35 do not, and one has no opinion.

As to wage and price controls, 57 predicted them, 47 predicted there would be no controls in 1951, and two did not comment. Those who expect such controls, generally expect them before July.

Get Those Roses and Bulbs In

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

IF YOU HAVE BEEN among those who have delayed in the fall garden program there are still things which can be done to insure more bloom next year. Roses and bulbs can still be placed. If the rose bed has not been dug, the American Rose Society offers encouragement to the new grower in a pamphlet made available to visitors at the recent Potomac Rose Show.

The pamphlet had a message "To Flower Gardeners Who Do Not Grow Roses." The advice should encourage all those who have held off growing roses. It makes the growing of the "Queen of Flowers" seem suited to every garden and gardener. It says in part:

"IF YOU are one of those who do not grow roses because you think it is too much bother to prepare beds and too much care to look after them, bear this in mind:

"A rose bed may be prepared in as complicated or as simple a way as you wish. The only difference being that in the simple way it will take a little longer for the bushes to become established, but eventually they should do as well as with the more complicated preparation of the bed.

"If you start the roses with a dozen or half dozen, the only care necessary during the season is a few minutes once a week or even every other week to cultivate the bed and dust the bushes for pests and diseases.

"The one essential rule is to buy your bushes from a reliable nursery, making sure that the roots are kept moist until planted. Follow directions of the nursery in planting and ask the American Rose Society for information.

"Fertilizing two or three times a year takes but a few minutes and the same for winter protection and pruning in the spring.

"That is as much care and bother as your first bed of roses will take and the results will be an additional pleasure in your garden."

THE ABOVE should encourage all those who feel they have too little time to give to rose growing. Having a well-prepared bed does hasten the process of having quantities of rose blooms and in the coming weeks when it is the best time for planting roses it might be just as well to try to give that added time to making a well-prepared bed.

The planting of some annuals in lily or other bulb beds is good garden practice. There are many annuals which can be planted in the fall and which will get an early start and produce masses of bloom before the spring-planted seeds or nursery-bought seedlings.

Among the annuals which can be planted in late fall when it is too late for them to make growth are—alyssum; both lavender and white, ageratum, calendula, calliopsis, candy tuft, cleome, cynoglossum, baby breath, nigella, annual phlox, portulaca and verbena. Many of these can be left where they are planted and will make the garden lovely when the tops of the bulbs are ripening.

Phlox Rosea Superba . . . can be planted now

ONE OF THE LOVELIEST sights we saw in the early part of last summer was a bed of annual phlox. It was a new venture for the owner who said she had just taken a chance when she read on the seed envelope that they could be planted in the fall, and had scattered the seed in the bulb bed. Small annuals planted over the bulbs does them no harm, but takes up some of the moisture which frequently causes the bulbs to rot.

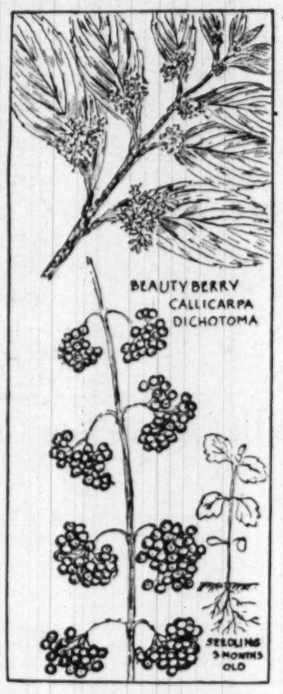
We are frequently asked about the difference in opinion as to the depth of tulip planting, instructions varying from 6 to 10 inches. Both are correct. It has been found that where bulbs are to be dug and dried and reset the shallow planting is better, but that shallow-planted bulbs have a tendency to split and form bulblets and so if bulbs are to be left for year-to-year blooming, the deeper planting is more desirable.

Try the Beauty-Berry For Moderate Shade

IN THE search for shrubs suitable for growing in moderate shade the gardener is likely to come across the beauty-berry, usually offered as Callicarpa purpurea but called Callicarpa dichotoma by botanists. This plant has come to this country from China and Japan, but there also is a similar though taller native species (C. americana). The latter grows in the mountains of Tennessee and is not reliably hardy in the northern climate.

Callicarpa purpurea is a fine shrub every gardener should become acquainted with. Its height seldom exceeds five feet and yearly pruning from the time it is set out will keep it still lower if that seems desirable for a particular location. The right time for pruning is in winter or early spring. It does not leaf out until spring is well advanced, but once started it is by no means tardy in covering its slender branches with a double row of bright green leaves.

The flowers appear about the middle of July or later, depending on the location. Individually they are quite small, but being arranged in fair size clusters along the stem in the axils of the leaves, they are by no means insignificant and their bright pink color adds to their attractiveness.



Berries Chief Beauty

YET few gardeners pay much attention to the blooms because they are not the main attraction of the plant. Its real beauty lies in the berries which follow the flowers in fall and ripen before the arrival of frost. Although each berry is less than a quarter inch across, they are tightly clustered, suspended on a slender stem. Each group, measuring close to an inch in diameter, is composed of 20 or more berries. These clusters have a faint resemblance to mulberries and our Southern native is even called French mulberry, a name that is misleading because it is neither French nor a mulberry.

The color of these small berries is a unique lilac-violet—a shade unusual in berries. It remains stable even when they are fully mature and after they have dried up, which they do without wrinkling noticeably. When in that condition they are exceptionally fine for winter arrangements.

The best time to cut the branches is right after the leaves have been blackened by the first frost. Pull off the leaves without disturbing the berries and place the stems in a suitable container without water. On well-developed branches there may be as many as two dozen clusters, arranged in pairs because the leaves are opposites and each leaf axil contributes one cluster. Indoors they will last as long as one cares to keep them—even for years.

Pruning Helps

REMOVAL of all berry-bearing branches is equivalent to a good pruning which helps the plants toward a dense growth. Where in addition to the berried branches there are many thin ones which failed to fruit, these are best cut off close to the strong branch from which they arise.

Those interested in growing a few additional plants can easily do so by sowing some of the seeds. One cluster should yield an ample supply because each berry contains four hard seeds. Sow them indoors in sandy soil early in January and keep moderately moist in a sunny window. They will require close to six weeks to sprout but in the meantime the gardener need only make sure that the soil does not dry out.

Growth in the first year is rather slow, as may be suspected from the fact that the shrub never grows very tall. During the summer the seedpan may be sunk rim deep in a sheltered garden spot. A large handful of leaves will protect them during their first winter outdoors or they could be placed in the coldframe is one is available. The following spring transplant them into the frame, or where they are to find their permanent domicile.

Although this is a good plant for semishade where it receives a fair degree of indirect light, it does as well in full sun. The reason for it not being used so much in full sun is that there are other dwarf shrubs which must have sun and present a more colorful flower display.

2-Purpose Landscaping Pays Off

DUAL-PURPOSE landscaping and planting require a little study on the part of the home owner but pay off in richer living, according to Dr. Richard P. White, executive secretary of the American Association of Nurserymen.

Beauty and shade, as well as delicious food, result from it. Since the interval between now and planting time will go faster than you think, it is not too early to begin planning. First, take one or more nursery catalogues and make a list of fruits and berries that make your mouth water.

Apples, plums, pears, apricots, grapes and cherries are a few, but don't neglect the crabapples, gooseberries and other jelly fruits.

In apples, select varieties for summer and fall bearing. Once you have your list of fruits, you can plan where you want them to give the landscape effect desired. The general idea is that an apple tree, for instance, can provide shade, flowers and fruit combined.

When you consider apricots, pears and plums you should not only think of the fruit, but the shape of the tree and the appearance of the foliage. There are several varieties of crabapples which are desirable as small trees for one-story houses and small yards. The crabapple is one of our most beautiful flowering trees, with attractive form and foliage, as well as fruit.

As a vine for an arbor or pergola the grape is striking for ornamental purposes because of the large leaves and the pendulant bunches of colorful fruit, delicious to eat fresh and excellent for jelly.

By such dual-purpose planting family life is made happier, the children get essential vitamins, and have enormous enjoyment.

Front Yard Solution

Plea for Dooryard Gardens

"WHAT we need is more dooryard gardens," is the title of an article in Home Garden magazine, by Editor Ralph Bailey.

"What with the arrival of the garage doors at the street front of our houses and the acceptance of the picture window with the picture of only the passersby to frame, the nostalgic dooryard garden of our grandmother's day merits rediscovery," he begins.

The modern fashion of garages close to the street "makes sense," he continues, but: "Replace the balanced, almost symmetrical facade of tradition with one gigantic window, as now seems to be the thing to do, and what's left of the entrance yard becomes suddenly ridiculous. So, too, does the window itself unless something rather special is done about it."

Even with older houses, with garage in the back yard, he continues, "the old foundation planting gets older and messier as the seasons go by."

Bailey supports the solution of the front yard problem which has been gaining favor throughout the country—the development of an attractive garden planting in the front yard.

"What about the dooryard garden?" he writes. "What can it do to help the situation? For one thing, a proper garden, as opposed to just a row of shrubs and trees along the house front, can shut off the garage-driveway-public approach area still more from the living portion of the dwelling unit and do it pleasantly.

"Secondly, and of the utmost importance, a well planned but unostentatious dooryard garden will provide a number of things of great virtue. It will make pleasanter, if only briefly, the way from the drive, or traffic center to the entrance door of the house . . . Again, it makes easier the avoidance of sterile and unimaginative foundation planting. Again, too, it makes it possible to provide something worthwhile looking at from inside the windows as well as outside—a picture for the picture window, if you like, or simply a picture from any window."

'This Plant Has Little Warts'

A CHILD who owns a Wart Plant can say, "Look, this plant has little warts. That's what those stripes are." Aptly named "Wart Plant," it will fascinate a small child especially if planted in a novelty container.

This succulent plant (botanical name—Haworthia faselata) requires a minimum of water (about twice a week), some sunshine, and proper drainage, according to the Society of American Florists. Because plants breathe and exhale through their leaves, it is important that they are kept clean.

By taking a special interest in growing plants, children soon learn to care for them and enjoy watching them grow.

Dramatic Possibilities in a Room

Black and White Are Right

BLACK has its place in a room. The dramatic possibilities of an all black and white scheme are something to explore. For the less adventuresome, the excitement of a black lamp or small table may be enough.

A black and white motif can be carried out with paint, lacquer, fabrics or wallpaper. Black and white printed fabrics and patterned wallpaper can be found as well as black and white rubber, plastic or linoleum flooring. All-white cotton carpets or textured white accent rugs that don't soil as quickly as one might expect are available this season.

All-black walls, all-white carpet and chairs in black and white textured fabric shot with gold form a background that is effective as well as restful, if you like contrasts. Solid blocks of black and white, small checks or prints can be used. Varying textures add appeal.

A black and white motif can be worked out in bedroom as well as living rooms, libraries or foyers. Tailored slipcovers of a quality all-white fabric that can be unzipped from chairs and laundered are no more difficult to care for than any light color, a decorator will tell you.

Black and white floors have been successfully shown with a Regency breakfront and period chairs for a library. The same type of floor has appeared in a French Provincial bedroom.

The sharp contrast of black and white can be emphasized in picture mats and frames. Or it can be played up with lamps.

Done with imagination, black and white can be beautiful and dramatic.

Painted Floors

Painted floors are frequently used in rooms with an Early American air. Terra cotta, maroon, deep blue and green make effective backgrounds for colonial rugs, whether they are large in size or are the smaller hooked or braided scatter rugs. A durable floor enamel is the type of coating employed for the purpose.

Garden Clubs

THE WASHINGTON GARDEN CLUB will hear a talk on landscaping by Miss Margaret Lancaster at the regular monthly meeting Monday at 1 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Miles Englebach, 6903 Brookville rd., Chevy Chase.

Celebrating National Flower Week, the club placed floral arrangements in the Americanization School and the Home for Aged Women in Georgetown.

THE HYATTSVILLE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY during National Flower Week distributed flowers to several community institutions. Leland Memorial Hospital, Prince Georges Medical Center, and a number of shut-ins at home in the area received bouquets.

THE BETHESDA COMMUNITY GARDEN CLUB will hear B. Y. Morrison, director of the National Arboretum, as guest speaker at a meeting Wednesday at 10:30 a. m. at the Battery Park Clubhouse. Mr. Morrison, known for his work with azaleas and iris, will speak on "Small Bulbs" and "Design of Landscaping for Small Gardens."

Hostesses at the luncheon will include Mrs. John G. Werneke, Mrs. Henry P. Chandler, Mrs. Samuel McKee and Miss Margaret Reading. Mrs. Wilfred M. Blunt is in charge of table arrangements.

Easing Homemaker's Load

INNOXA LTD. of London, England, has a solution for what might be called the occupational ailment of the American housewife—dishpan hands. Innoxa makes a cream that forms a protective coating for hands against dirt, oils, acids, grease and other such substances. The cream dries on the hands, and when the work is finished, just wash it off.

A CHEMICAL to kill common molds that cause mildew stains is being distributed by J. W. Johnson Co. of Bellwood, Ill., in an aerosol formula. The solution is sprayed under pressure on to fabrics or leather to prevent mildewing. The active mold killer in the preparation is Monsanto Chemical's "Milmer 1."

SYLVANIA ELECTRIC Products, Inc. of New York has developed a new light bulb of 150-watt power that is only the size of a 100-watt bulb. It is primarily designed for kitchens where powerful light is needed from a bulb fitting standard-size fixtutres. It has a rated average life of 750 hours.

FROM PAN WAFF, INC. of Chicago comes an idea for squirt gun pancakes and waffles. The company plans to market soon ready-mixed batter packed in a metal container under pressure. Press the button and out pours the batter on the griddle ready to bake.

Reforestation, Landscaping Not the Same, Expert Says

GOOD reforestration practice isn't necessarily sound when it comes to home landscaping.

Many people are attempting to hasten home planting effects by setting out twice as many trees as needed—with the idea of removing the excess plants later when they become crowded. But according to W. H. Knowles, of the Davey Tree Expert Co., it is rare indeed to find an individual with the courage to remove every other tree from an attractive planting after he has watched them grow from infancy.

Trees seldom develop uniformly. The would-be remover often is faced with the necessity of uprooting the best specimens for proper spacing.

In most cases, trees won't begin to crowd until they reach some semblance of maturity. Then removal can be a gargantuan task that calls for a professional approach and considerable expense. Some people plant alternate fast and slow-growing trees. The fast develop so much more quickly than the others, the home owner finds he can't bear to part with these less desirable, but bigger, trees. Consequently, he never does get around to doing the job.

Cost for double the amount of growing stock, advises Mr. Knowles, could more properly be spent in buying the logical number, but in larger sizes.

High-Riding Cabinets Ease Kitchen Storage Shortage

THERE'S extra storage space in many a kitchen—and it's right up next to the ceiling.

If your kitchen problem is one of finding a place to keep seldom-used items, the solution might be to add another row of 18-inch high storage cabinets above the regular wall units.

This plan works especially well in remodeling of older kitchens, for the ceiling heights are frequently 8½ to 9½ feet, providing plenty of room to accommodate the extra cabinets.

Average height of a modern kitchen installation is 84 inches from the floor to the top of the wall cabinets. To place an 18-inch-high cabinet above this installation requires a minimum of 102 inches or 8½ feet.

Use of an extra tier of wall cabinets in such a situation accomplishes two things: First, it increases the storage capacity of the kitchen. Second, it eliminates the need of bringing a valance down from the ceiling to the 84-inch height, a procedure which is usual in kitchen remodeling.

While the next-to-the-ceiling cabinets are not easily accessible for dishes, utensils and supplies that you need every day, they are the answer to the problem of storage of items used just now and then.

Tileboard's Fine to See on the Ceiling!

A TREND which is catching on rapidly in current home building and remodeling is the use of insulating board tiles for living-room ceilings.

The tileboards, available either in squares or rectangles, provide relief from the commonplace type of ceiling and offer a smart, distinctive effect which carries out the modern motif in up-to-date homes.

Additionally, they provide insulation, which keeps a house cooler in summer as well as warmer and easier to heat in winter. They also have considerable value as sound deadeners.

While these tileboards are appropriate for dwellings of almost any style, they are especially popular for ranch-type houses and homes of other design which feature corner windows and picture windows.

A factor in the growing preference for the tileboards is the individuality of room treatment which can be achieved with their use. They are produced in a variety of sizes, colors and surface textures. Pre-finished, they eliminate the need for further decoration.

They can be painted, however, if a change in color plan is desired.

Economy and ease of application are other characteristics which have played a big role in their increased use dealers say. The 12-by-12-inch size, for instance, usually can be obtained for about 10 to 12 cents a unit.

PARTICULARLY well adapted for renewing old ceilings marred by plaster cracks or other disfigurements, the units sometimes are attached right over the old surface by means of adhesives and supplementary nailing.

The most common method, however, is to fasten wood nailing strips to the joists through the old plaster, then nail, staple or clip the tileboards to the strips. Such a job can be done in a day or two.

Many owners of aging homes have modernized old-fashioned high ceilings. In such procedure new joists, placed at the desired height, are attached to the old. The insulating tileboards then are nailed to the new joists.

Interlocking joints and other types of edge treatment in the tileboards conceal the nails.

The interesting ceiling pattern in this television room is the result of insulating board tiles put to good use. Sidewalls are of insulating board plank, a companion product. These interior finishes decorate, insulate and retard sound passage. They come in a variety of sizes and colors

Make That Drab Dining Room A Center of Charm, Interest

A DRAB dining room can be given new charm and interest without refurnishing it. A nondescript old oak table, chairs and buffet will acquire style when painted white and antiqued, or with wood bleached and pickled.

If the furniture has plain lines, keep it as it is and develop an American Provincial feeling. On the walls use yellow and brown paper, brown-checked curtains at the windows, and a rug which picks up both colors.

Replace the glass in cupboard doors with wire mesh to show off peasant pottery, hand-blown or hand-pressed glass tumblers and salad plates of American glass in contrasting colors.

If your family likes contemporary design, bleach your furniture blond and paper the walls in a pattern of blue and white. Remove the doors from the upper half of the cupboard. Then paint the inside shelves a brilliant red as a contrast to cobalt blue plates, modern-design low stemware, cups and saucers.

Cover chair seats with blue-and-white striped fabric edged with red, white and blue ball fringe. Complete the modern American picture with a blue rug and white draw-curtains at the windows.

MAKE THE MOST of wall space in a tiny dining room. Line one wall with 12"-wide shelves. Fit them from floor to ceiling, but in varied heights. Leave enough space between several for tall pitchers, large dishes and the like, and keep some for smaller items like vases, low bowls and stemware.

If more storage space is needed, enclose some of the lower shelves with paneled, hinged doors to hold table linen and seldom-used table equipment. Place the dining table near the windows in a small dining room to save space, or have a cabinetmaker fashion a table which will fold down and lie flat against the wall after meal time.

In a too-conventional dining room, introduce a treasured possession as a focal point on one wall. A grandfather's pendulum clock will be effective if surrounded by shelves. In this room with a Colonial note, use a room-size oval or rectangular hand-woven or hand-hooked rug, and table linens which pick up the rug colors.

In New Homes

Many Factors Bring About Condensation

CONDENSATION in new homes is an old problem.

Many a new homeowner believes that if moisture seeps through the basement walls, then the basement must leak, or the plumbing leaks. This isn't necessarily true.

Condensation takes place wherever warm, moist air inside the house comes in contact with colder surfaces, such as windows, basement walls and exposed pipes. Moisture on basement walls, in new homes, is often mistaken for a water condition.

This is the result of the condensation of air moisture upon cold basement walls. A large amount of water is used in constructing a house. It is mixed with concrete, cement, plaster, wallpaper paste, tile work and some of the paint.

This water eventually comes out of the house by evaporation, which consequently develops air with a moisture content higher than normal. Condensation in a new home won't bother the owner if he sees that ventilation is provided whenever possible to hasten the normal drying out process.

However, don't try to accelerate this process by extremely high heating temperatures during the winter. Such a practice could lead to uneven drying, which may cause cracks in basement walls.

D. C. Shows Big Increase in Gas Home Heating

THE NUMBER of District homes equipped with gas heat increased by 17,974 during the past year, according to a report by the Washington Gas Light Co. A total of approximately 81,000 District homes now are heated by gas.

Some 15,000 dwelling units will get gas heat in 1951, if materials continue to be available, the report continues. The increase in homes with gas heating has kept pace with the increasing supply of natural gas being made available to District consumers.

Says Heating Man

U. S. Houses Are Too Hot For Health

CHICAGO. — American homes are too hot for good health and millions of persons suffer every year from colds, sinus and other ills because they live in hot, stuffy, houses.

That's the opinion of R. E. Moore, vice president of Bell & Gossett Co., large manufacturer of hot water heating equipment systems.

Many Americans are unaware of the fact that the most healthful temperature is between 68 and 70 degrees, Moore said.

Over-heating also means unnecessary expense added to the fuel bill. Every degree that a home is heated over 70 accounts for three percent of the annual fuel bill, he reported.

The company has developed a new comfort heat regulator system which anticipates the effects of changes in weather and wind velocity from the outside before they are noticeable indoors.

This new device furnishes "indoor comfort" at any desired temperature, which means an even heat, unaccompanied by any sensation of air movement or of a person feeling hot or cold.

Widespread Use of Home Garbage Disposal Units Forecast

Home garbage disposal units some day may be in almost universal usage, the Federation of Sewage and Industrial Wastes Associations was told yesterday.

Morris M. Cohn, a public health engineer of Schenectady, N. Y., and editor of Sewage and Industrial Engineering, reported more than a half million disposal units are in use. The federation opened a four-day meeting Monday at the Statler Hotel.

"Some communities still prohibit the use of home units," said Cohn. "Some (do so) by ordinance and others by unwritten rulings for reasons of ineffective sewer design, inadequate sewers, overloaded or no treatment facilities."

But Jasper, Ind., he said, has outlawed the garbage can in favor of the disposal unit. The town is "backed by the first State law in history that permits municipalities to purchase, install and finance home waste units as a sanitation utility."

'The Lady' Looks Like It's Off to A Great Start

By Richard L. Coe

"THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING" has at last opened in New York and from the all-important first five reviews, it seems safe to rejoice that the Christopher Fry play will repeat its London success in this country.

For it's a fascinating play and being brilliantly acted by John Gielgud and his company at New York's Royale Theater, with two exceptions the same cast I told you about some 16 months ago from London.

The joy of it lies in its language. Its imagery is soaring and imaginative; in lesser hands than the Gielgud-directed cast those same words might be dull and ponderous, but so skillfully is the verbiage whipped along that one is reminded at long last that our ears were meant for something other than flat thoughts expressed in cliches.

The story is wryly simple. The setting is a small English market town in "the fifteenth century either more or less or exactly." The central figures are a discharged soldier who wants to be hanged and an alleged witch who emphatically does not want to burn. The townspeople are a likeable lot who speak in sky-blown phrases of witty wisdom and, in the end, everything comes out as one would wish.

WHILE MUCH has been made of Fry's words (and some few critiques have been as con as mine are pro), it seems to me everyone misses a cog by ignoring or under-rating Fry's character-drawing. For each of his 11 characters is an individual.

And this quality, it seems to me, is exactly what has been lacking in theater, movies and the dramas of the glass tubes today. In their efforts to play safe, offend no one and reach everyone, our writers have systematically been cutting their human beings according to set patterns. Persons of certain jobs and certain backgrounds speak in a certain manner and that is that. No risk is run in the effort to find the least common denominator.

Not so with Fry's characters. The man who wants to be hung is as individual a fellow as the lady who most anxiously has no desire to be burned. The chaplain "as sweet and uncertain as church-bells on a windy day;" the lusty-talking Nicholas who makes a firework display of sex but within is as virgin as the snow; the not-murdered-after-all ragman (so superbly played by Esme Percy in his 10 brief moments) and the surprized Alizon Eliot who's taken from a convent to marry the mayor's son are all memorably individual.

WHICH IS, I think, one reason for the play's appeal, which has been wider than the wisemen of both sides of the Atlantic expected. Despite aloof observations by Variety's Boston "mug" and one or two of the wire-service reviewers that Fry's high-spirited words won't find wide appeal, the reverse seems to hold; as usually is the case when an entertainment is viewed as "too good" for the average man. How long do you suppose it will take for such commentators to realize what is, after all, himself, isn't just a sucker to be scorned?

Fry himself is just the simple sort of person the financially minded think won't like his "Lady."

He lives in a farm worker's cottage in the Cotswold hills with his wife, Phyllis, and 13-year-old son, Christopher. He's a great one to talk about the weather (see the preface of the published version of "Lady") and his only concessions to the machine age are his old-fashioned typewriter and a prewar car with doors that by now must have fallen off their hinges.

"It's close to the sky here," Fry tells his Cotswold visitors, "I think writers should work more out of doors the way landscape painters do."

FRY WAS born in Bristol 42 years ago into a distinguished Quaker family; his father gave up money and comforts to minister in slum parishes and Fry started on an acting career at 17. When it didn't pay, he became a schoolmaster and saved $50, which he used to float him into England's repertory theater world. Though he made up his mind to write for the theater over 20 years ago, he did none till the war started.

A Gielgud performance in "Richard II" finally resolved his half-formed ideas. "Instead of the old sweep of rhetoric," Fry remembers, "Gielgud played Richard in a minor key, with clear, precise enunciation. This was a new approach for me and it seemed to me then that poetry could be written for the theater without cloying or confusing the spectator.

"After all," he continued, "the Elizabethans never talked of verse plays; they simply went to the playhouse for entertainment. To attempt to segregate poetry from the main stream of drama seems unnecessary and rather selfconscious."

America's first Fry play was ill-fated, "A Phoenix Too Frequent," poorly directed and teamed last spring with someone else's one-acter, the depressing "Freight." After all the cabled reports about Fry's shimmering wit, this inept version raised fears that the English air had clouded travellers' judgements.

ALTHOUGH Lawrence Langner promised this reporter, before a witness, that "The Lady's Not for Burning" would come to Washington before Gielgud goes back to his Stratford summer season, I'm inclined to think its New York reception will hold up a visit this season.

However, another Fry play, not a translation, will soon be with us here, "Thor, With Angels," written for the 1948 Canterbury Cathedral Festival. The story is of the decline of the Norse gods and the coming of St. Augustine to England. Catholic University's speech and drama department has this scheduled as its next production and while I've riffled through the published version, I'm trying to keep an open mind for Father Hartke's players. Too, re-reading "The Lady's Not for Burning" gets pleasanter each time.

HAVING MADE a hit with four-in-one for "Quartet," Somerset Maugham now tells three unrelated stories in a picture he naturally titles "Trio." With British stage and screen stars in the leading roles, the picture opens at the Playhouse Wednesday night to aid the American Theater Wing's Washington hospital committee drive for entertainment in veterans' hospitals. The girl with the locket is Jean Simmons, who plays in "Sanatorium," a story about patients in a Swiss rest home. Top right are Michael Hordern and James Hayter in "The Verger," a man of irony who lost his job. Critics Applaud Gielgud in Fry Comedy; Kelly and Hagen Click in Odets' Play

THE BROADWAY LIGHTS.

Stage entrance: Christopher Fry's London click "The Lady's Not for Burning" inspired unanimous approval . . . The critics applauded its musical prose and John Gielgud's natural pretending . . . They also voted for Clifford Odets' "The Country Girl," noting that the author's typewriter still gives off the sparks that elevated him to the Broadway and Hollywood heavens . . . Paul Kelly and Uta Hagen are its marquee power . . . In Boston another London click named "Edwina Black" was greeted with this embrace: "The best mystery play in a long while" . . . Variety's New Haven sentry decided "Ring 'Round the Moon" is "strictly for the leisurely carriage trade," which is a nimble kiss of death . . . Cole Porter's "Out of This World" was saluted with "quite a show" by the Phila. Inquirer's play-detective. The other oracles were just as sugary. The star is Charlotte Greenwood, absent since 1927 from the Broadway temples. The new musical's bacchanalian ballet, they report, "outsexes the sexy ballet in Carmen" . . . The Met opera opening was our town's major event. The showoffs, as usual, attracting more newspaper space than the show.

WINCHELL

IN THE WINGS: Michael Strange, who made her exit this week, was noted for her novels, her sense of humor, and her ex-husband, John Barrymore . . . An interviewer once inquired: "How does one feel being married to John Barrymore?" . . . "One feels," she replied, "like an audience!" . . . Some actors were discussing the recent wave of notable deaths in the theater . . . "I wonder," one wondered, "who'll be next?" . . . "I don't know," shuddered La Bankhead: "Let's wait till the obits come out."

THE CINEMAGICIANS: "American Guerilla in The Philippines," with Ty Power handling the lip-tightening exploits, was snubbed as a limp show by one reviewer. Others found it a shoot-to-killodrama . . . "King Solomon's Mines" is a superb safari saga co-starring fang-and-claw. Lovely Deborah Kerr brightens it . . . "Devil's Doorway" offers a frisky frontier fable featuring Robert Taylor as the noble redskin from the old MGM reservation . . . Alexis Smith is a policewoman in "Undercover Girl." Her beauty is her badge—and such a lovely pair of handcuffs! . . . "The Fireball" (about roller-skaters) stumbles over its cliches and falls on its bromides . . . "Sunset in the West" sinks.

STAIRWAY to the Stars: Celeste Holm and "Affairs of State," enjoying the final chuckles on some detractors, pays off its angels next month. It opened six weeks ago . . . "Peter Pan," starring Jean Arthur, breaks its record of 45 years next Thursday eve, when it reaches its 238th performance . . . Now that Lindsay & Crouse have "Call Me Madam" under their money-belts, their next opus will be a comedy-mystery . . . All the backers of the ill-fated play "Springboard to Nowhere" were prominent Greek-American businessmen . . . "Season in the Sun" (only 50 perfs young Fr y night) has already paid its investors one third of the cost . . . "Legend of Sarah" and "Daphne Laureola," recent departures, nicked their backers for $115,000. One was Pulitzer Prize playwright L. Hellman . . . From a N. Y. Times opera review: "And while her acting was exaggerated, it was emotionally true" . . . Huh?

THE AIRISTOCRATS: "Lights Out," one of the top-notchers, rates 5th in Neilsen's latest TV survey . . . Berle leads, as usual . . . in Neilsen's radio listings Radio Theater is No. 1 again. Jack Benny and Godfrey's Talent Scouts runnerups . . . Walter Hudnut's Sunday-nighter is tied for 4th with Mr. and Mrs. North and Amosnandy . . . Billboard's disk-jockey poll confirms the talk that Leo Fuld's "A Letter to My Mother" (a London recording) is special delivery. That's his second in a row. His other smash was "Where Can I Go?" . . . Tallullah kept things exciting on NBC's all-starrer. Not surprising when Miss Vesuvius is in the cast . . . Critic John Crosby thrashes soap-operas in a mag essay. The battle is pretty darn hopeless, Mr. C. It's like trying to stop Niagara with a sponge . . . Robert Lewis Shayon's radio report in the Sat. Review of Literature: "News gains not an inch from television. The unit of news is the item of information—and this strides along quite briskly, thank you, in radio. Also shots of the newscaster, pretending not to read his copy, are as phoney as they are dull."

THE INTELLIGENTSIA: The book of the month for January is Ramsey Ullman's "River of the Sun" (Lippincott) . . . Bud Schulberg's "The Disenchanted" is a big seller in the local marts. The Doubleday staff (on 5th avenue) call it the fastest number in two years . . . Frances Parkinson Keyes' next book "Joy Street" (due Dec. 1) has a first run of 150,000. Insiders predict it will out-sale her last click, "Dinner at Antoine's" . . . Charles Wagner's book "Harvard: Four Centuries and Freedoms" (Dutton) won a "must" rating from D. Gordon, the trade handicapper for American news . . . Flair copped the good-timing sweepstakes with G. B. Shaw's last published mag piece . . . Harcourt, Brace will unveil "The Soviet Image of the U. S.: A Study in Distortion" on Dec. 28. The author is F. C. Barghoorn of Yale . . . In the Dec. Magazine Digest movie star Gene Tierney will announce donating her eyes (after death) to the eye-bank of 210 E. 64th NYC . . . The Times litree lad used this: "Frabjous joy." The N. Y. public library couldn't locate the word in its dicksh . . . End of yawn.

THE PRESS-BOX: Republican editorial pages called Democrat defeats in New York "a slap against new dealers" . . . That's bunk. There was only one true New Dealer in the race (Lehman) and he won . . . General Clay informed Berliners: "You have played your part in restoring freedom" . . . Horseradish! The only liberty restored in Germany was for the freed Nazi war criminals.

'Office Slavery'

Like It Tart? Read Shaw On Music

By Paul Hume

"A CORRESPONDENT, writing in vivid prose, describes me as 'an ignorant ass' for having spoken of 'four cornets' in the overture to Der Freischutz. I own the soft impeachment generally, but demur to the particular instance of it. Sir Isaac Newton confessed himself an ignorant man; and though I know relatively everything he knew, and a good deal more besides, yet relatively—relatively, mind—I am almost as ignorant as he. The term 'ass' I take to be a compliment. Modesty, hard work, contentment with plain fare, development of ear, underestimation by the public; all these are the lot of the ass and of the last of the Bassettos. But I think the superior information and sagacity of my censor might have enabled him to detect an obvious misprint. 'Four expert cornets' is nonsense, and would be so even if the instruments referred to—horns, of course—were really cornets. What I wrote was 'Four expert cornists.' My correspondent is an idiot."

How often have I been tempted to write along the lines of the tender remarks quoted above. And, as pragmatists might put it, temptations are sent us in order for us to have something to yield to.

"Quoted" did I say? Yes, indeed, and quoted from Ayot St. Lawrence, its bard. There were years — five of them — when Shaw, G. B., wrote music reviews for the London Star. His plays and his novels had not yet earned him a living. What he later called his "five years' office slavery" did.

IF YOU love Shaw in any guise, if you find his prefaces pointed as no other prefaces ever seem to be; if "Saint Joan," "Candida," "Man and Superman," "Androcles and the Lion" —if all these and comments on vegetarians, Pavlov, American lady whistlers, and greatness in music hold you bound in laugh-

Maybe Eight Million

Faye Lets a Few Friends In on Her Little Secret

By Sonia Stein

WHEN FAYE EMERSON announced her engagement, she announced it to just the same people any girl announces it to—her friends. Faye's friends happen to number into the millions and she reached them the same way she made them—through television.

With characteristic straightforwardness and lack of embarrassment, Faye brought Skitch Henderson onto the set last Tuesday, just before the end of her show, and said:

"I would like you to meet the man I am going to marry. I thought this was a good way to announce it, as I wanted you to know it first. I will let you know later about our plans and the date of our wedding."

The announcement, predicted by columnists for several weeks, came as no surprise. But that it came on the program came as a surprise to end all surprises. Unalerted, the CBS publicity man assigned to the show wasn't even watching. A publicity man from her sponsor's advertising agency was right in the studio with a photographer to take shots of other phases of the show, but he was caught so flat-footed he didn't even get a shot of Faye and Skitch together.

BY RIGHT, nobody should have been surprised. Since the beginning of this series (Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, 7:45 p. m. on WTOP-TV) Faye has made it a point to keep the show unpredictable. While the publicity men winced every time she had a spectacular guest whose presence they were not allowed to publicize in advance, Faye stuck to her principles. She wanted the show to be a series of interesting but unadvertised visits with people. Some days you find a taxi driver, a milkman or a policeman on the show. Other days you find Abe Burrows or Faye's fiance. It's as simple as that. "I don't like to call it a grab bag," she says, "but that is what it is, really."

One of her production staff explains it this way: "You live next door to Faye and her door is always open to you. Whoever else is visiting her you get to meet."

APART from this delightful don't-ring-just-enter aspect of the show and Faye's widely vaunted charms of personality and form, Faye turns out to be a sharp showman. Surrounded by a production staff of more people than CBS' hour-long dramatic program, "Studio One," can boast, with each man a good man well paid, Faye is still considered by each one to be on a par with him in his own field.

One of the three writers who helps think up ideas for the show has 800 TV credits to his name, is said to have written more TV shows than any other writer. Of his blonde and dimpled boss he says, "She's every bit as smart as I am."

The crew supervisor insists she knows more about lighting and production than three fourths of the directors. "She fights for a good picture and she gets it," he adds.

"It's a pleasure not to have to start from scratch in explaining camera angles to her," says a cameraman. The camera crew gives her the best work it is capable of. "At least she appreciates what's good," they explain, and forgive her any moments of temper. Her storms blow over quickly, and a deserving cameraman or guest is often rewarded with a kiss on the cheek. The red smudge is usually worn like a badge of honor; the gentleman just don't seem to be able to find their handkerchiefs handy.

IF THERE are awkward groupings, Faye catches them on the monitor at rehearsal. "Mother will compensate for it all," she announces and balances the picture by taking a stand where a stand needs taking.

Annual Invasion

The Foreign 'Long Hairs' Are in Again

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK, (AP)—We are invaded again!

The Museums and galleries are under siege, some concert halls have been occupied, the publishers are threatened, the record companies have been beaten back to their second line of defense.

It's the usual fall invasion of the rampaging long-hairs. Dancers, authors, singers, orchestras, instrumentalists, painters, and books, records and music scores from foreign shores seem to be swarming here in greater numbers than ever.

In three months, the most worthwhile writing . . . with, of course, a few exceptions . . . to reach the American reader has come from England, France, Italy, Sweden, Finland, Romania and South Africa: Forester, Williamson, Cary, the Sitwells, Tilsley, Godden, Story, Bower, Bowen, Whipple, Kersh and, for classics, Ford, Trollope and Boswell; Frison-Roche and Calet; and Saponaro, Dagerman, Waltari, Gheorghiu and Lessing. Elizabeth Bowen is among the visiting lecturers.

THE picture is much the same in the picture field. A perspective of the last 50 years in British art, assembled by the English-Speaking Union, has been shown at Knoedler's. Among items on view are paintings by Moore, Steer, Sickter, Rothenstein, Nash, Wyndham Lewis, Bacon and Grant; among lenders is Queen Elizabeth. This month the same New York gallery will exhibit Toulouse-Lautrec paintings from the Musee D'Albi, never shown here before.

Opening in the Brooklyn Museum late in November will be "Italy at Work," consisting of 2500 separate items as small as an earring and as big as a living room or a theater lobby. Four ships are transporting the material, which was selected by an

Gaynor's 'Lend an Ear' Starts 2d Week Tomorrow

CHARLES GAYNOR, the young (39) man who wrote the words, lyrics and music for "Lend an Ear," opening its final Gayety week tomorrow night, came by his gift for satire the hard way.

He had the strange job of mass producer of college songs for Fred Waring. On his program a decade ago, Waring offered to play the college song of any school that applied and, if the school had no song, he promised to provide one.

Thus to assistant Gaynor fell the job of providing musical sentiment and alma mater lyrics for such schools as Muhlenberg, the Missouri School of Mines and Texas Tech. This fall Gaynor's again hearing some of the school ditties he mass-produced.

NOT UNNATURALLY, this assignment pushed his tongue far into his cheek, which accounts for the brightest moments in "Lend an Ear." In this he spoofs the operatic world—"Words Without Music," the musical comedy universe—"The Gladiola Girl" and the traditional revue "production number"—"Santo Domingo."

Gayety matinees are Wednesday and Saturday.

Special Matinee Set at Gayety

A special Thanksgiving Day matinee will be given at the Gayety Theater, when "Born Yesterday" will be the attraction.

Judy Holliday will recreate her Broadway role in Garson Kanin's sharp comedy about Washington life since the war.

Robert Penn Warren has given permission for the Mount Vernon Players to present the verse play arrangement of his "All the King's Men" for which casting auditions will be held this week.

Director Robert Pimm will audition applicants Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights from 8 o'clock, in the Players' undercroft theater at 900 Massachusetts ave.

The second in a series of mental health films will be shown Tuesday night in Cafritz Auditorium of the Jewish Community Center, presented in association with the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene.

The program will start at 8:30 in the auditorium at 16th and Q sts.

The Westmoreland Players will repeat "A Murder Has Been Arranged" next Friday and Saturday nights on their stage in the church at Westmoreland Circle.

The Drama Group of Friendship House, 619 D st. se., meets every Monday at 8 p. m. under leadership of Gwen Cerney.

Miss Cerney, trained in speech and drama, hopes to develop the group into a community little theater organization, though it founded primarily to show that "drama can be for fun."

Eckstine Sings Here Tonight

Billy Eckstine and George Shearing, accompanied by their instrumentalists, will give a concert tonight at 9 at Uline Arena.

Eckstine and the British-born pianist are on the last lap of a concert tour that has taken them across the country. Their joint concert last night at New York's Carnegie Hall was a sell-out event.

Eckstine went to Washington's Armstrong High School and after graduation attended Howard University.

'The Mikado' Opens G & S Tomorrow

THE GILBERT and Sullivan perfectionists are not coming to Washington this year, but special transportation arrangements have been made by the Stabler Ticket Mart in Brentano's, 1322 F st., for Washingtonians to attend performances of the D'Oyly Carte opera company this week and next at Ford's Theater, Baltimore.

The engagement will open tomorrow night with "The Mikado," which will be played through Wednesday evening. "Patience" will be performed Thursday night, with a double bill of "Trial by Jury" and "Pinafore" completing the first week's repertory. Billed for the second week are "The Gondoliers," "Iolanthe," "The Mikado," "Cox and Box" and "The Pirates of Penzance." Matinees are Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Seats for the engagement are on sale at Stabler's, where limousine service direct to the theater from Washington may be arranged.

As it has for three previous Saturday mornings, a British film made especially for children will probably draw a houseful of youngsters to the Plaza next Saturday.

The picture is 'The Little Ballerina," with Margot Fonteyn as the leading dancer. Showings, under joint sponsorship of the Plaza and the Children's Theater of Washington, will be at 9:30 and 11.

RIGHT FOR ARENA: Barbara Cole, Warner Schreiner, top, and Harry Scully in "The Taming of the Shrew," opening its run tomorrow night at Arena Stage. Director Edward Mangum points out that the Elizabethan play was originally done in much the same intimate atmosphere made possible by his theater's central staging

Howard Season Opens Tuesday

The Howard University Players will open their season Tuesday night with a production of Gogol's "The Government Inspector," which will continue at the campus theater through Saturday night.

'Met' Competition

The Needle's Eye

By Jane Watson Crane

PAINTINGS by at least a score of artists of the District and vicinity passed through the needle's eye of the regional jury at Richmond and were sent on to New York for the final judging in the competitive nationwide exhibit staged by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, due to open there December 8. The District was included with the Southern States in one of the arbitrary geographic groupings by which the country was partitioned. This sector submitted 639 paintings, of which 76 were chosen for the "finals." And among these names we spotted the following as registered from D. C. or nearby Maryland and Virginia:

Edmund Archer, Benjamin Abramowitz, Mimi Bolton, Samuel Bookatz, Alexius Burgess, Marguerite Burgess, Omar Carrington, Lucile Evans, Robert Gates, John Chapman Lewis, Richard Lahey, Richard K. Miller, Albert Murray, Helen Beccaro Niles, Anthony Qualia, Mary Ruth Snow, and Prentiss Taylor.

Jurors for the group were Leslie Cheek, jr., director of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, Jerry Farnsworth, director of the Farnsworth School of Art in Florida, Lamar Dodd, head of the art department at the University of Georgia, and Charles Shannon, artist of Montgomery, Alabama. Similar juries were set up in other parts of the country, and all their selections must pass a national jury composed of these artists: Francis Chapin, Howard Cook, Lamar Dodd, Ogden Pleissner, Zolton Sepeshy, Millard Sheets, Maurice Sterne and Esther Williams. The make-up of the show, scheduled to consist of around 300 or so items all told, will be announced toward the end of this month. By that time there may have been set up such an anvil chorus from the "refused" across the Nation that those who started this cumbersome ball rolling will wish themselves on the moon or Mars.

WHAT STRIKES one immediately on perusing a "regional" list is that in actual fact the regional idea does not hold up in this country. As recent census data revealed, we are a mobile people, and the artists are particularly given to roaming. Here we have a painter long identified with New York who turns up in Macon, Ga; another in Florida; a New Englander who is tired of rigorous winters has sought sunshine for south of Boston, and so on. A painter in search of bread and butter will go where a good teaching job is offered, even if it takes him, as it often does, from the Atlantic to Pacific Coast; an artist is not going to think of his "regional" affiliations when it comes to securing a New York dealer and being identified with the thousands who crowd the 57th st. market. Therefore, it is hard to swallow the generalizations about regional characteristics which are already being pronounced as the "returns" come in.

The figures have no great significance, since there is no system yet devised to regiment talent or round up all the geniuses through a dragnet process. Yet as indicators they are worth recording. The only State from which no entry was received was Nevada; Hawaii, the Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and Alaska all had representation. There were entries from Americans living temporarily abroad, in England, France, Italy, Mexico, Canada and Japan.

All told, 6248 pictures were submitted, and of these by far the greatest preponderance were from the Eastern States and the general Atlantic area. The national jury is probably not even going to try to solve the dilemma of having four times as many paintings from this region passed as from the others.

And out of all this, ultimately four paintings will emerge as winners of the $85 cash prizes. The judges charged with this weighty responsibility are William M. Milliken, director of the Cleveland Museum of Art, and Painters Eugene Speicher and Franklin Watkins.

Postoffice Is Due Soon To Fix '51 Stamp Program

By William M. Stuart

IT IS UNDERSTOOD postal officials will consider the 1951 stamp program within a few weeks. The Postmaster General held the 1950 program down to 11 commemorative stamps and his associates are of the opinion the next program will follow along the same lines. The files of the department are filled with suggestions for new stamps, the same requests coming in year after year. Industry, arts and sciences, famous Americans, statesmen, soldiers, historical events—in fact, almost any name familiar to the average American is proffered for a commemorative stamp.

STUART

Selecting stamps is not an easy task, for there are many influences figuring in every commemorative. Too, the question of politics enters the task of selecting stamps. While Congress, until a year ago, was permitted to select many stamps, officials now seem to be of the opinion that Donaldson will follow the plan agreed to by Congress—to limit the number of new stamps in a single year. It would be a mistake if postal officials favored any plan placing final selection of stamps in the hands of agencies which might be biased. The Postoffice Department is efficient enough to make its own selections.

The Canadian Postoffice Department announces that the 1950 design of the 19-cent stamp representing Canada's fur resources, issued on October 2, is now available overprinted with the letter "G" (Government).

The Society of Philatelic Americans will hold an "Open House" meeting next Saturday afternoon at the second annual A. S. D. A. national postage stamp show, 71st Armory, New York City. Ignatz Reiner is in charge.

THE NEXT MEETING of the Capital Precancel Club will be held tomorrow evening at the home of Joe Taylor, 3420 Newark st. nw. Lt. Col. C. F. Harding, a prominent national precancel collector has become a member of the club. He is an engineer on duty with the air force.

Joseph A. Herbert, jr., spoke at the meeting of the Pentagon Philatelic Society November 2 on "United States Postal History." He pointed out the importance of postally-used covers to supplement the usual collection of stamps and how these covers would enhance a collection, making it completely different from any other collection. He also stated that collecting postally-used covers presented a new and unexplored field for the collector.

An auction was held at the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening at Pythian Temple. Ernest Woodhouse acted as auctioneer. At Tuesday's meeting in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., representatives from the United Nations are scheduled to be present and the suggested stamp program will be discussed.

With Music, Shaw Came To the Point

ter and admiration—now is the time to read, or re-read, four volumes.

The easiest for you to get hold of is called "London Music in 1888-1889 as Heard by Corno di Bassetto, later known as Bernard Shaw." This is published by Dodd, Mead and Co. There are three other volumes, also entitled "London Music," carrying various years up to 1893. Constable in London is agent for these British - published volumes. And if you ask them often and hard enough, they might reprint them, since they have thought about doing so for some time.

LET ME assure you that Shaw knew music. He studied piano for years, his mother was a singer, and he searched out scores and read them. His knowledge was broad, thorough, and just as prejudiced as any of the rest of us. From here on this column is devoted to quotations from the volume covering the years 1888-1889:

"One cannot always be chronicling promenade concerts. As there is nothing else to chronicle just now, I am thrown back for matter on the letters of my correspondents. In busy times, I often wonder whether the gentlemen who take the trouble to write to me about musical affairs ever have their breath taken away by the calmness with which their information is, without the slightest acknowledgment, appropriated and retailed in this column as an original product of the vast factory in which my brain machinery works up the raw material of my experience. Let me explain to them, however, that when their information arrives, I sometimes know already, and sometimes know better."

ON THE MESSIAH: "The choruses retained for the occasion were sung in the old prosaic jog-trot. Unto Us a Child is Born was sung correctly, and with admirable purity of tone; but in spirit and feeling it might have been the congratulations offered to a respectable suburban family on the latest addition to the nursery; one whose name could not by any stretch of imagination be called Wonderful! Counsellor! The Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

May 17, 1889: "I do not know anything more annoying at a concert than a man who beats time . . . reasonably or not, the thumping of his boot distracts and annoys you beyond expression, and you gloat vindictively over his defeat when a syncopated passage throws him out."

And this one, 60 years ago: "I have been to the Barber of Seville and Lucia; but do not quail, reader: I am not going to inflict on you a single word of criticism concerning these antiquities. I know your opinion; and you know mine."

"THE TRUTH is that no man can conduct a Beethoven symphony unless his instincts are not only musical, but poetic and dramatic as well."

"We must have an English Wagner: perhaps he is starving somewhere whilst I write. If we would only give a chance to every potential Wagner among our millions—that is, secure him adequate schooling and adequate grub—we should have an actual one in two generations at least."

"The truth is that the artist must be at once his own master and everybody's pupil. If he cannot learn from all that he sees and hears, and then teach himself the practical application of what he has learnt, art is not his affair, and he had better remain an amateur."

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher

ON RECORDS

A MARSHMALLOW WORLD. Vic Damone, Mercury. "Baby, It's Cold Outside" made its debut during the hot summer months and yet managed to become a big hit. Nevertheless, the solons of Tin Pan Alley believe that songs pertaining to the weather are seasonal items and, like cold tablets or sunburn lotion, must only be introduced when the elements are appropriate.

If a composer is lucky, he may write a song which will please the public year after year. Among the winter songs, "Winter Wonderland" and "Let It Snow, Let It Snow, ditto ditto ditto" would seem to be in this category, along with the standard favorite, "Jingle Bells." I am deliberately omitting the Christmas songs, which are a separate division unto themselves.

"A Marshmallow World" is a new number launched just recently, in the hope that it will be on everyone's visible breath when the cold weather arrives. It is the product of Carl Sigman, who might be termed the Master of the Metaphor. He's the fellow, for example, who wrote the lyric about the poor guy who let his heart fall into careless hands, a circumstance not to be taken lightly or literally. In his latest effort, Sigman has come darn near to letting things get out of hand.

When he describes a snow-covered landscape as a marshmallow world, one is willing to concede him his poetical point. But he strains the point a bit by referring to marshmallow clouds in the arms of the evergreen trees, and at one point changes metaphors in midstream, so to speak, by deciding that the snowy vista is a "whip-cream day."

It's when, after noting that the sun is red like a pumpkin head, he says it's "a yum yummy world made for sweethearts" that Sigman's whip-cream-and marshmallow-world gets a bit too gooey for my taste. The melody for this musical blizzard was supplied by Peter DeRose, the composer of "Deep Purple," a title which suggests a less romantic aspect of cold weather.

Despite this mild toasting of Sigman's marshmallow, I must admit that, on the whole, it's one of the most pleasant numbers of the current season. The Lord Fauntleroy lyrics about winter seem a lot better when delivered with Vic Damone's boyish gusto than when examined here, if you'll pardon the expression, in cold print.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

Big Things Doing Thursday

NEW VISITORS for the season this week include Leonard Warren in his first Washington recital, and the first of the Boston Symphony's three concerts.

Some unusually fine song recitals are scheduled for the week: Conrad and Tilson today, Sederholm and Warren later on, and Florence Miller on Thursday.

BUT JUST look at that Thursday schedule! Four major concerts at the same time! Reginald Kell and his chamber players open Howard's series, while another clarinet and piano team raises the curtain for the Georgetown series.

"Down in the Valley" is coming up at the Agriculture Department late this month, under the direction of Richard (he did the music for the Faith of Our Fathers pageant this summer) Dirksen.

Friml's Firefly is being polished for this Thursday and Friday in Woodrow Wilson High. The first concert of the Montgomery Symphony Orchestra is next Sunday. P. H.

Faye's Not Apt to Climb on Shelf Soon

Faye Emerson and Pianist "Skitch" Henderson emerge from the opening of the Metropolitan Opera's 1950-51 season Monday night with more on their minds than "Don Carlo." Miss Emerson announced their engagement Tuesday night on her television show when she introduced Henderson to her audience as "the man I am going to marry" his 10 years of experience to the Emerson show. He says if Faye ever decides to retire from in front of the cameras she'd make a superb producer-director. But she's not apt to retire lightly. Tied to Pepsi Cola for five years with a handsome contract, Faye is prepared to stick it out. She makes extra filmed shows during the week to get a backlog so she can squeeze in weekends and a vacation. She admits, with a little judicious prompting, that if she were to marry again and have another baby, she'd continue working on television. "It's one of the natural, charming things in life," Faye explains. "We see pregnant ladies on the street and all around us, why not on television?" she asks with perfect logic.

(Coincidentally — but nothing more, I am convinced — Faye made this observation to me the same day in early October that Skitch Henderson was appearing on her show as a guest pianist.) She did stage work, wearing period costumes, until close to the arrival date of her son, William "Scoop" Wallace Crawford 3d who is now 10.

Healthy to the point she insists she'd have to incur a broken leg to keep to her bed, Faye is daunted by nothing trivial. A sty on the eye which would have sent lesser women into seclusion, sent Faye into action. She bought a black velvet eye patch, covered it with sequins and did her show. Well, why not?

Faye genuinely likes people and clearly expects them to accept her as she is. This they do by the hundreds and all multiples thereof.

In dollars and cents, this affection has meant that Faye can command $500 to $1000 per guest appearance and some experts figure she'll earn $200,000 from TV alone in 1951. Yet she appears for nothing at so many benefits she can hardly fit them in edgewise. Since she neither sings nor dances, her appearances should not stand out. But stand out they do. Other performers claim she brings out the best in them. Abe Burrows calls her "the guest star I would most like to be stranded with on a deserted TV program."

At the Milton Berle all-night TV marathon for the cancer fund, celebrities stood around backstage yawning at each other while they waited their turn to appear. But when Faye drifted through the area, wafting smiles here and there they came to life like sleeping beauty kissed by the prince.

The man who has run off with this prize is a musician of considerable reputation, but he is so little known for anything but his music that newspaper morgues do not have a record of his real first name. New York radio listeners know Skitch somewhat through his morning piano show on a New York station. I suspect we'll all know him better ere long. If he's part of Faye's life, we will be aware of him. After all, if we are friends we are friends of the family.

'Long Hairs' Are in Again

American jury with the aid of ECA, the Italian government and an Italian art association. All three of these large exhibits will circulate widely to other American museums.

THERE is no end to the list of foreign music personages. They include conductors such as the Italian Victor de Sabata and the Czech, Rafael Kubelik; the Spanish soprano, Victoria de Los Angeles, and the Bulgarian basso, Boris Christoff. Among the groups are the Polytech Chorus of Finland, the Little Singers of Paris, the Virtuosi di Roma. The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra is currently making its first American tour with Beecham conducting, and Koussevitzky is working with the Israel Philharmonic, preparing for its first American tour to start in January.

As a footnote, there's the Don Cossack Chorus. A few managers around the country have suggested canceling engagements because they are "Russians." Their New York representatives says they are "White Russians." Of the 30 members, all but five are American citizens; six served in U. S. uniform in World War II, two have purple hearts. The other five are replacements who fled their countries behind the Iron Curtain and have been screened by the FBI. Two concerts are definitely canceled, a few others in abeyance. Their manager says they are just as "Russian" as Heifetz, Horowitz, Milstein and Platigorsky.

New Show for Hayeses

Peter Lind Hayes and his wife, Mary Healy, who have been making their way in television, have another video show in the offing. Originally projected for an earlier date on CBS-TV, it has been rescheduled for November 23 on NBC-TV under sponsor auspices.

Don Dickinson (left) plays the role of Comdr. Rafael C. Benitez on "Studio One" tomorrow night at 10 on WTOP-TV when the story of Commander Benitez (right) and his submarine, the Cochino, is dramatized on one of the most elaborate TV productions ever attempted. Benitez, now a resident of Arlington, Va., is acting as technical adviser for "The Last Cruise"

Two Shows Opening In N. Y. This Week

There are two Broadway openings scheduled for this week.

On Tuesday a new play by John Van Druten will bring Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer together in the same Broadway production for the first time. They are husband and wife. "Bell, Book and Candle" is the title of the work.

On Friday the Playhouse will get a new play by Paul Crabtree, young actor-director. It's title is "A Story for a Sunday Evening."

And Old Movies

He Harbors a Love For the Old Cliches

—By John Crosby—

CROSBY

OLD MOVIES on television are pretty much like the old songs. They bring back memories, especially the dialogue. Just the other night, for example, I watched the older cop punch the younger one on the shoulder affectionately: "You look done in, kid. You better get some sleep." Gads, it takes me way back to my childhood.

I harbor great affection for the old cliches, the real classic lines of movie speech. In fact, in our house we talk that way, my wife and I, having been nurtured and brought to bloom by the movies. Why, just the other day, I drew my wife gently to the sofa and spake as follows:

"Do you mind if I tell you a story. Once upon a time there was this fella, see? And he was all mixed up. And then he met this girl, see? And after they'd seen a little of each other then he wasn't mixed up any more. Everything began to make sense . . ."

"Why, John! You're talking about us!"

She knows her lines very well.

SCARCELY a day goes by that she doesn't fix a tremulous eye on me and say: "Are you serious?"

"I've never been more serious in my life."

Even my son, age three and a half, has got to the point where he talks almost pure motion picture, a species of English Chaucer wouldn't recognize. The other day, as I was heading out the door to work, he came dashing after me: "Please, sir," he pleaded, "let me go West with you. Though I'm only three and a half, I can row a boat along with the best of them."

And you know what I snarled back, don't you? Of course you do. "I ask for men in this outfit and what do they send me? KIDS!"

Last night I was mixing myself a scotch and soda in place of my customary martini. My wife stood up slowly, half face to the camera. "What's happened to you?" she declared brokenly. "You've changed. What's changed you, what's changed us?"

Well, of course, the real reason I was drinking scotch instead of martinis was the fact that there wasn't any gin in the house. But nothing is as simple as all that. Not in the movies or in our house.

"What's changed us?" Reprise, you know. "Nothing. Everything."

"You're making me cry and I never knew I could."

THIS IS MY MOMENT, my big line. "You're a funny kid." And I drew her to the sofa again. (There's too much of this drawing to the sofa in our joint. I've complained to the director about this. My theory is I should be allowed to walk up to the fireplace and stare at the mirror, just for novelty.)

"I'm afraid," I said in my clipped English way, "you'll find this very different from Ameddica."

This is where her big scene comes. She stands up, removes her glasses and shines forth in her true beauty. And, naturally, you know who she turns out to be, don't you? The admiral's daughter, of course. And me just a poor subaltern in His Majesty's Horse Marines.

Well, anyway—thanks for listening.

Ambitious Plans For 'Studio One'

ONE OF THE MOST ambitious undertakings yet attempted on television—surpassing in some respects the technical problems of "Battleship Bismark"—will be shown tonight at 10 on WTOP-TV when "The Last Cruise" is dramatized on "Studio One."

It is the story of twin submarines, the Cochino and the Tusk, which sailed 400 miles north of the Arctic Circle. There the Cochino, racked by explosions and smothering in fire and deadly gases, was lost in the icy waters of the ocean while the Tusk tried frantically to locate her.

Technical advisor for the program, adapted from Comdr. William Lederer's story, is Comdr. Rafael C. Benitez of Arlington, Va., who was commanding officer of the Cochino. His part in the TV play will be taken by Navy veteran Don Dickinson.

The cast includes 25 actors in speaking roles and 15 extras.

Color TV Gets Roughed Up

THE BROADCASTING INDUSTRY which recently received sanctions to editorialize, will do so at the expense of the Government agency which gave it the permission, tonight at 8:30 on WTTG.

Dr. Allen B. DuMont, president of the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories, will "demonstrate the impracticality" of the color television system authorized by the Federal Communications Commission.

DuMont, who has opposed the newly authorized field sequential system all during the hearings on color TV, will give a demonstration of the color converters needed to turn present black and white sets into color receivers, and will show the first commercial set made in 1938 which can still receive black and white pictures, along with a modern receiver which cannot receive color.

Tonight's demonstrations are part of the fourth national meeting for the Men of Science and Industry in New York.

Pulitzer Show Airs Political Musical

MORROW

KING

IN LINE WITH its policy of presenting plays and dramatizations of other material by Pulitzer prize-winning authors as well as the prize-winning material itself, "Pulitzer Prize Playhouse" will present "Knickerbocker Holiday" tonight at 9 on WMAL-TV. Playwright Maxwell Anderson won his Pulitzer award for "Both Your Houses."

Appearing in tonight's performance will be Dennis King as Peter Stuyvesant, dictatorial-minded governor of New York when it was in New Netherland. The romantic leads will be played by Doretta Morrow, formerly in "Where's Charley?" and John Raitt, musical comedy singer.

BETTI ALLEN AND GIL HODGES have begun a Monday-Wednesday-Friday series of shopping shows for Woodward and Lothrop called "Across the Counter at Woodie's." Seen at 3:30 p. m., it's on WMAL-TV.

Gene Klavan does a Wednesday-Thursday-Friday economy size version of the shopping shows for an economy store. He makes his pitch on behalf of Murphy's five and ten-cent emporium for five minutes on WTOP-TV.

Kiddies Get WNBW's Sunday Punch

With fabulous Hopalong Cassidy on at 6, WNBW now gives a suitable appetizer in the form of the adventures of a Robin Hood of the West, "The Cisco Kid," at 5:30. These shows were filmed especially for TV with Leo Carrillo and Duncan Renaldo in the leads. "The Cisco Kid," in its movie version, is the only western ever to capture an academy award.

FROMAN

Also primarily for the kiddies, Sylvia Devey's "Your Junior Review" Sundays at noon on WNBW has just set a record.

The show outrates every other locally produced program, and gives many network shows, including "Howdy Doody," a serious run.

Today's guests will be Alice and Peter Hessellund-Jensen, children of the Counselor of the Danish Embassy, and the choral group from Leland Junior High.

And a new show for children, showing them how to draw, starts today on WNBW at 1. It's called "Unk and Andy."

Other Sunday Highlights

WNBW—2:30. Maj. Alexander P. De Seversky and Rear Admiral John G. Crommelin, jr. (ret.) debate "Is Air Power the Key to Survival?"

WNBW—3. Three Americans, former prisoners of the Northern Koreans; John Steelman, assistant to the President; Raymond Foley, administrator of Housing and Home Finance; F. W. Kelsey, Veterans' Administration, and Comdr. F. S. Steinke.

WNBW—4. Senator Estes Kefauver.

WTOP-TV—5:30. Governors Sidney S. McMath of Arkansas and Val Peterson of Nebraska discuss "The Meaning of the Elections."

WMAL-TV—7. Jane Froman and Russell Nypes join Paul Whiteman in musical tribute to Irving Berlin.

WMAL-TV—7:30. Ella Logan, Dwight Fiske, Victor Moore; Jessica Tandy and Beulah Bondi in scene from "Hilda Crane."

WTOP-TV 7:30. Rise Stevens, George Jessel, Peter Donald and Dancer Jane Scott.

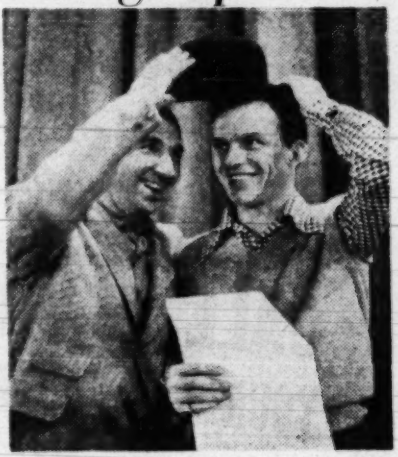
CBS Puts Sinatra in Tough Spot

IN 1938 FRANK SINATRA was making $15 a week as a singing waiter; in 1943 he was making $25,000 a week as the idol of the bobby soxers; in 1950 at an unmentionable figure, he was pitted against some of the strongest TV competition ever gathered, nurtured and promoted by a network. With critics and home audiences alike agog and ahowl over Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca on NBC-TV Saturdays at 9, CBS-TV put in Sinatra to lure an audience.

Noted for his gentle singing voice which caused—whether by publicity man's suggestion or not—a swooning, screaming, squealing enthusiasm among the teenage girls in his audience, Sinatra is also noted in more adult circles for his charm as a comedian. Bob Hope, master performer, likes to keep Sinatra around him for the laughs.

In a still smaller and more adult circle, Sinatra is noted for his work on behalf of Democracy. Winner of a special Motion Picture Academy Award in 1945 for a short on tolerance, Sinatra also did a good pro-Democracy job for the State Department's "Voice of America."



Frank Sinatra takes a fashion note from Ben Blue, regular comedian on the "Frank Sinatra Show" (WTOP-TV, 9 p. m., Saturdays), when he lifts his lid

You, too, can look like this. (Maybe.) Inga Rundvold shows "Inga's Angle" on glamour, Tuesdays at 2:45 on WNBW

'Game Room' Makes High Score

"THE GAME ROOM," a melange of nonsense and music, racked up a score of 400 performances over the past week-end. Les Sand, emcee and quite the "gamiest" figure on the show, graduated to TV from the baseball diamond via radio. A pretty sharp pitcher, Sand played for eight years with a number of teams, including the bearded House of David. Today, naked of jowl and scalp as well, he still has the longest eyelashes on local television (in the men's league, that is). Unrehearsed and mad by design, "The Game Room" has its serious side: it never refuses to plug a worthy charity.

With Sand on the show are Sammy Ferro and his Trio and Singer Betty Madigan.

The work of medical artists will be shown on WTTG tonight at 8:30 on "The Johns Hopkins Science Review."

'Starlight' Series Opens Tonight

A NEW DRAMATIC series, "Starlight Theater," has its premiere tonight at 8 over WTOP-TV. The show will alternate with the biweekly Burns and Allen comedy show. This new program means that "The Show Goes On" doesn't go on—for quite so long. That variety program now becomes a half hour show from 8:30 to 9 every Thursday instead of fluctuating from half an hour to an hour on alternate weeks.

Tonight's "Starlight Theater" bill is "Welcome Home," by Manya Starr, with Nancy Kelly playing the lead.

Apropos of the Burns and Allen show, it keeps Bea Benadaret busy even if it is telecast only every other week. She appears on CBS' "My Favorite Husband" radio show Saturday nights and the Jack Benny show Sunday nights in Hollywood, and dashes to New York by plane for the TV rehearsals.

Same Question: Should Teacher Discuss Controversial Matters?

By Elsie Carper

SCHOOL TEACHERS are like the Sphinx. They seldom express their own views.

Years of dealing with school officials and boards of education and the regulations that force teachers to act through long channels of command have taught them to keep quiet.

A brief look into the mind of teachers is afforded by a National Education Association study released last week on "Teacher Opinions on Ethics in the Teaching Profession."

The poll was taken by the NEA to bring up to date a code of professional ethics in force for more than 20 years.

THE STUDY indicates that teachers themselves haven't made up their minds whether it is ethical for them to discuss controversial issues in the classroom.

A sampling of 1300 selected teachers and school officials shows 32 percent who think it ethical, 35 percent who think it unethical and 32 percent who think it depends on the situation.

This uncertainity on the part of teachers raises a question of whether they can do an adequate job of teaching current events and preparing students for citizenship in a world in which nearly every issue is controversial.

During the recent preelection campaign in Fairfax County teachers were ordered by school officials not to discuss proposed and controversial changes in the county form of government.

The political issue was of primary interest to students, particularly those in civics classes. With proper supervision they could have had a first hand view of democracy in action.

ONE OF THE FIRST iron curtains on information was rung down on District school children in the 1930's when the so called "red rider" to a congressional appropriation bill prohibited teachers from discussing Russia in the classroom. Thousands of District students graduated from high school completely ignorant of the Russian form of government and its threat to world peace.

The NEA code for teachers considers it the teacher's obligation to "direct full and free discussion of appropriate controversial issues with the expectation that comparison, contrasts and interpretations will lead to an understanding, appreciation, acceptance and practice of the principles of democracy."

THE SURVEY also shows that teachers have some doubt whether they should actively support a candidate in a political campaign.

Thirty-eight percent thought it all right for a teacher to support a candidate, 30 percent said it was not ethical and 30 percent sat on the fence and said it all depends.

The NEA research staff noted quite a difference of opinion in the views of men and women on the two questions.

More men (48 percent) than women (25 percent) found it ethical to take up controversial questions in the classrooms. Fifty-five percent of the men and 25 percent of the women expressed a willingness to actively support a political candidate.

THE POLL SHOWED that younger teachers are more apt to discuss controversial questions than teachers in the 40 to 60 age bracket.

Nine out of every ten teachers thought it ethical to join and become active in social, religious and civic organizations. Three fourths of those voting said it was unethical to fail to participate in activities for community betterment.

The teachers voted as the "most unethical" practice of a school official's dismissal of a teacher or a recommendation of dismissal without ample notice or time for the teacher to be heard.

ANOTHER PRACTICE which the teachers scorned was failure of school officials to recommend a teacher for a position in another community because he does not want to lose the teacher's services.

The "most serious and most frequent unethical practice" observed by the teachers was that of "teachers gossiping about and criticizing other teachers."

They also complained of school officials who take the side of pupils against teachers, and of teachers who criticize parents, superiors and the school system to outsiders.

Hume to Direct Music at G. U.

Paul Hume, The Washington Post music critic, has been named director of music at Georgetown University, it was announced by the Very Rev. Hunter Guthrie, S.J., university president.

He succeeds the late Dr. Edward P. Donovan, founder of the University Glee Club and director of music at the hilltop for the past 30 years.

A Chicago native, Hume attended the University of Chicago where he pursued courses in music theory.

The Record Player

New Waxing of 'Rigoletto' a Great Job

VERDI: Rigoletto — almost complete, standard version. Jan Peerce, Leonard Warren, Erna Berger, Nan Merriman, with Robert Shaw Chorale, and RCA Victor Orchestra under Renato Cellini. Victor DM and WDM 1400. LMX6101. $15.55 for LP.

There is no doubt about the splendor of this recorded performance. Its planning shows in the even brilliance of the results. No complete opera made in this country can compete with this set for casting, production and sheer sound.

The cuts in the score are those you generally hear in the opera house. For the most part, they are unimportant, and often merely repeat the music already heard. The singing of the three principals, Peerce, Berger, and Warren is uniformly excellent. Berger gives the music of Gilda a luster and polish it rightly owns but often lacks.

Her voice is not one of sensuous beauty but of absolute control and musicianly intelligence. Neither she nor Peerce bring in a single questionable note or phrase, either in interpolafed high notes or in the realm of pure singing.

The chorus is simply not believable, it is so marvelous. You have not heard such choral singing in any American opera house, and must try the set for the chorus as well as for other reasons. Cellini carries the opera at fine pace, except for a few moments that really ought to have moved a shade faster for true excitement. The set comes with libretto of the recorded version, and superb notes and outline by Alice Berezowski.

Victor must follow this great set with others to match. They have shown once again how fine their work can be.

MENOTTI: The Consul—almost complete production, with Broadway cast. Patricia Neway, Marie Powers, and others, with orchestra under Lehman Engel. Decca DX 101. $15.55.

Here's another almost complete performance of just as high a level as the Rigoletto. It would be unfair to name Miss Neway and Marie Powers and not mention the excellent work of Lydia Summers, Gloria Lane, Andrew McKinley, George Jongeyans, Leon Lishner and the rest of the cast. The level of singing and dramatic work is so high that it could confound anyone who lacked faith in American singers and actors.

The music is not unfamiliar to any who know Menotti. But we do not criticize Puccini for being Puccini in Tosca, Butterfly and Boheme—why should we object to Menotti sounding like Menotti in both the Medium and the Consul? His orchestration is remarkable, his writing for voices unique among our composers today.

His sense of theater is far greater than that of Wagner, who was the only other composer to achieve such success in writing both words and music. The transferal of the stage production to records has been wonderfully accomplished, with a handsome set of words and pictures to fill out the stage situations.

—HUME.

Mitchell Lists Film Suite

ZINO FRANCESCATTI stands at the top of the world today, as far as the world of violinists goes.

The great Frenchman will be soloist Wednesday night with the National Symphony under Howard Mitchell. He will play the third concerto, in B Minor, by Camille Saint-Saens. His playing of this piece last season with the New York Philharmonic made such a terrific hit that it was recorded at once.

Mitchell will precede his soloist with Virgil Thomson's suite, Louisiana Story.

Closing the concert is the fourth symphony of Dvorak, one of the most beautiful of all the romantic scores of the nineteenth century.

"TOWN HOUSE"
Facing Rock Creek Park

A unique home with individual charm—perfect for the Diplomat, Artist, Lady or Gentleman Executive seeking a small in-town residence. Rock Creek Park is literally your front lawn. VACANT. A "type" home frequently sought but seldom found. While there are but 4 rooms—each is well proportioned. The living room, approximately 25x14 has a most unusual as well as artistic fireplace—the picture window view is Rock Creek Park. The dining room is about 20x14 with picture window and has the same advantages. The 2 lovely bedrooms have 3 exposures, EACH WITH PRIVATE BATH—both also overlook the park. In addition to the above you will find small entrance hall, a service stairway, ample closet space, storage attic, maid's room and bath; GAS HEAT; built-in garage. The decorations are in exquisite taste and the color scheme is gay and adds a certain charm to the whole. Its setting and landscaping is most unusual and the lovely flagstone terrace is just another feature. Possession with title. To be sold to settle an estate. An artistic home—comparatively new and situated on a lovely knoll having beautiful panoramic view of the surrounding countryside. The site is just a trifle under 5 acres. The design is Early American—brick construction and the interior plan is both pleasing and practical—the soft colorful decorations reflect exquisite taste and add a certain charm to the whole. The living room with its artistic bay window takes full advantage of the view, nicely proportioned dining room, lovely paneled library with built-in bookcases and large tile lavatory adjoining—the entrance hall is roomy and the graceful staircase is most impressive. A typical "Good Housekeeping" kitchen that is de luxe in every detail with a breakfast room connected—the leaded glass windows create a cozy corner for light refreshments and cocktails. The 2nd floor has 3 delightfully proportioned bedrooms and there are 2 beautiful tile bathrooms—ample closet and storage space. The screened porch, and breezeway to the unusually large 2-car garage with tractor and tool storage space is just another feature. Cellar under entire house. Oil hot-water heating system. Slate roof. A 300 foot well. For full details and appointment to inspect today—call

Clubs Celebrate

Optimists Week Centers On the Boy

The Optimist Club of Washington will join 800 other member clubs in North and Central America in observing "Optimist Week," starting today.

Optimist Club work centers around the boy, and the theme of this year's week is "Today's Boy —Tomorrow's World."

For the underprivileged boy the Washington club, which numbers 165 members, provides supervised play, handicrafts, sports and summer vacations at camp, and a chance to be a member of the Optimist Boys' Club Band.

Also participating in the observance of "Optimist Week" is the Arlington club, with 75 members.

The Arlington club sponsors coaster car races, several Junior Optimist basketball teams and a baseball team. Members also arrange weekend outings for boys at Camp Hill Springs, Westmoreland County, Va., and next July will send three boys to the club's "University of Citizenship" school at the University of Virginia.

U. S. Colonials Knew Shifts in World Politics

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Nov. 11 (Spl.).—Colonial Americans were as aware of shifts in European politics as citizens today, though not so quickly.

That is revealed through the first index ever made of colonial American newspapers.

Just published here, the "Virginia Gazette Index" provides a quick reference to the foreign dispatches in the paper between 1736 and 1780, reflecting eighteenth century Virginians' awareness of events abroad. Foreign and local dispatches, advertisements, trivia and anecdotes are covered in the 1314-page index.

The index, an 8-year project, was compiled by Lester J. Cappon, editor of publications and Stella F. Duff, senior indexer, Institute of American History and Culture, with the aid of grants from the Rockefeller Foundation and Colonial Williamsburg.

The Index is being issued with a complete microfilm of all extant copies of the Virginia Gazette published in Williamsburg between 1736 and 1780.

Retreat Here For Lutheran Chaplains

First postwar retreat conducted for Lutheran chaplains is to be held here Wednesday for all Missouri Synod Lutheran chaplains stationed east of the Mississippi.

The retreat will take place at Christ Lutheran Church, 16th and Gallatin sts. nw. On Thursday, the tenth training conference will be held under the sponsorship of the Armed Services Commission.

The Rev. William F. Bruening, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, will be the celebrant for the opening service of Holy Communion at 10 a. m. Wednesday. The one-day retreat will be conducted by Dr. Richard R. Caemmerer, professor of homiletics at Concordia Theological Seminary, St. Louis, Mo.

Group Gives Foot Care To Children

A community service project designed to provide free foot care to needy children has been begun by the District of Columbia Podiatry Society.

Dr. Aaron M. Steinberg, chairman of the society's Needy Shoe Fund, announced the project yesterday.

Its ultimate goal, he said, is to provide examination and treatment of the feet of every child in District welfare and charitable institutions through the setting up of foot clinics at the instiutions.

The clinics will be manned, he said, by members of the society.

Voluntary Aid Program for Korea Set Up

The State Department yesterday announced a voluntary advisory committee on voluntary foreign aid.

The program was announced by Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, chairman of the advisory committee, who said, "This new effort by the American people is intended to supplement the work of the United Nations in this field."

Taft said prominent citizens would be asked to assist the organization.

American relief for Korea will be handled under auspices of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service, which includes 54 groups sending aid to destitute countries.

Soybeans Held On Farms for Advance in Prices

CHICAGO, Nov. 11 (AP).—Farmers in the Midwest are keeping a tight hold on their soybean crop this year.

This is in sharp contrast with previous years, when farmers marketed beans almost as soon as they were harvested. The heavy shipments to market invariably broke prices.

Then, as the months went by, soybean prices slowly worked into higher ground—but it wasn't the farmers who profited from this price advance.

Farm organizations, agriculture schools and other advisers have urged producers to hold back beans, wherever possible. That it has been possible is shown by the relatively small receipts at major terminals.

Beans now are selling well above the Government support level of $2.06 a bushel on the farm. That support is calculated as $2.26 at Chicago. Beans ended the week at $2.78.

Retail Furniture Sales In Month Gain Over '49

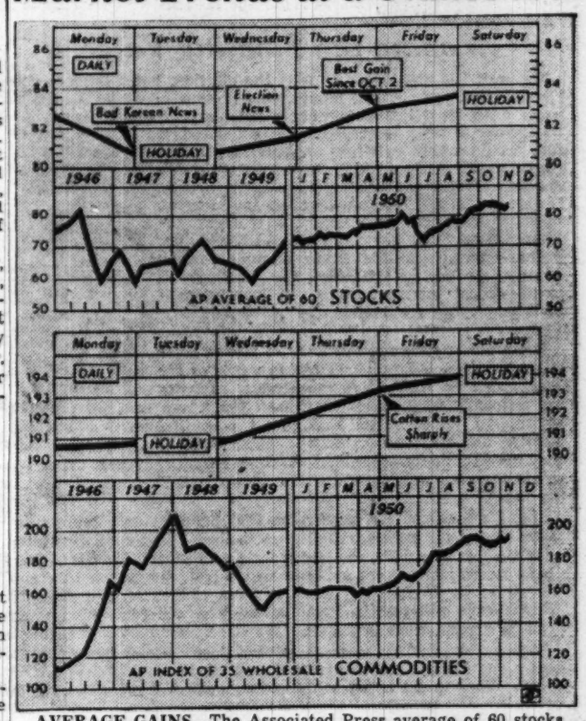
The volume of total sales at retail furniture stores during September was about the same as in the preceding month but 29 percent higher than a year earlier. Declines occurred in both cash and charge account sales during September, but these were offset by a further rise in installment sales.

Sales of all types were considerably larger than in the corresponding month of 1949, the increases ranging from 21 percent for cash sales to 36 percent for charge-account transactions, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

7-Millionth Car of Year Reported Assembled

DETROIT, Nov. 11 (AP).—The auto industry's seven millionth vehicle of 1950 has come from the assembly lines. Reporting this, Automotive News said car and truck output this week will total 128,594 cars and 25,513 trucks. Last week the factories built 145,044 cars and 24,661 trucks. Most of this week's decline, the trade paper said, resulted from model changeover activity at Ford and supply shortages in other parts of the industry.

Market Trends at a Glance . . .



AVERAGE GAINS—The Associated Press average of 60 stocks closed last week at 83.6 against 82.6 a week previously, the best gain since the week ended October 21. The volume of trading was considerably smaller owing to the two holidays. Showing the sharpest advance since the week ended July 14, the commodity index closed the week at 194.0, compared with 190.6 in the preceeding period, the fourth consecutive weekly gain

A. T. & T. Stockholders to Vote Nov. 15 on Billion Stock Boost

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 (AP).—Stockholders of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. will vote Wednesday on a proposed billion-dollar increase in capital stock.

This deal promises to be the biggest single private financing operation in history; and it involves on a giant scale a question of financial policy that has intrigued the most learned and experienced minds in Wall Street.

The question is this: Whether, in raising new money to expand your business, it's better to sell additional shares of stock, on which you want to maintain a specific dividend rate, or to borrow the money at a lower interest rate but to put a mortgage on the property and obligate yourself for interest payments that have to be met, come what may.

The A. T. & T. policy is that the Bell System's funded debt should not exceed one third of its total capital, although the percentage is now a little over 48 and has run over one-half. The new financing plan emphasizes the company's intentions of trying to continue to raise a major portion of its new money from sale of stock.

The financing plan for approval is to enable the Bell System to continue its massive expansion program that has cost five billion dollars since the war.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Wooing the Floating Voter

Maybe it has nothing to do with the election, but I think it does. For the sixth consecutive month, redemptions of Series E. savings bonds exceeded sales, thus proving Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder a poor forecaster. He estimated that during October sales would offset cash-ins. Apparently, Americans are still more anxious to convert their dollars into things—to spend money—than to save. The country is still inflation-conscious, and fearful.

Livingston

That's borne out by complaints reaching the White House about the high cost of living. Older persons—pensioners—are having trouble making annuities or savings stretch. The white collar group—school teachers, State and local government employes—are feeling the pinch and saying so.

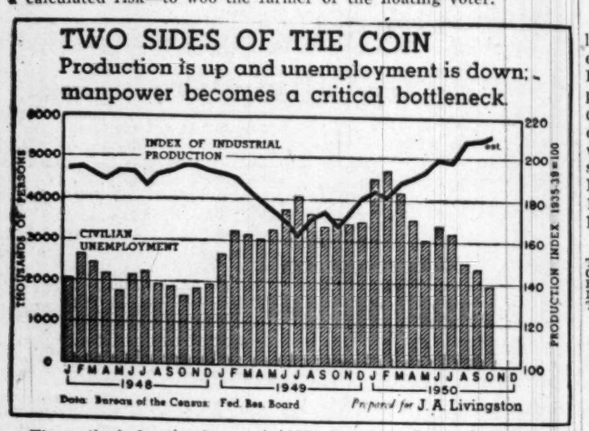
These persons are not members of strong labor unions, which can bargain for higher wages or are safeguarded by cost-of-living contracts. They're not farmers, whose prices have been rising and who are protected by support prices which will go up when industrial prices rise. They're not businessmen able to boost their profit margins. But they have suddenly—overnight—become a political force. They represent the vote which could well decide the 1952 election. They're the "float."

So, it's a reasonable assumption that Senators and Representatives from both parties will play up to them. Neither Republicans nor Democrats must worry about their own party adherents. Die-hard Democrats are not going to switch from the Truman Administration; they'd have no place to turn. Likewise, the die-hard Republicans will remain Republicans. The adherents of a party can be depended on to adhere. It's the nonadherents that count.

If the above analysis means anything, then it seems likely that the next Congress will make a determined effort to stop the inflation spiral. That would imply a pretty tough tax bill, which would dip down into the pockets of the lower-income brackets. That's where the mass spending power is.

Farmers Prosperous Again

Naturally, that would produce heavy protests from the labor groups which have supported the Administration. But the Administration will have to take a chance that the CIO and the AFL supporters will stay with it. At the same time, Congress might be willing to grant the Department of Agriculture authority to sell commodities to force down prices. Farmers might not like it. Here politicians must take a calculated risk—to woo the farmer or the floating voter.



The outloo': for the farmer in 1951 is extremely good. Prices are rising, marketings are expected to run 10 percent ahead of this year, and net income after expenses is estimated up 15 percent. Aside from 1947 and 1948, that adds up to a record farm year. The need for high support prices has diminished.

The main economic battle in Washington now will be whether to use indirect or direct controls to stop inflation. So far, President Truman has leaned to indirect controls—taxation and credit and monetary curbs. But a vocal group prefers price controls and rationing. Price ceilings have an appeal. There's the price tag. It's fixed by fiat. It can't move.

Manpower the Real Bottleneck

But price ceilings never stick. If prices are too low, goods disappear from the "white" market and go under the counter to the "black" market. Further, price control would require a large administrative force. Third, it merely puts off the day of reckoning. When the ceilings are removed, prices shoot up—as in 1946 when OPA folded.

The real bottleneck today is manpower. We do not have enough workers to produce tanks, guns, planes, ammunition and ships, along with record-breaking demands for civilian goods. Unemployment is down to the lowest level in several years (see chart), while production is at a postwar peak. In 51 out of 150 industrial areas, workers are almost "impossible to find," according to the Department of Labor.

That means that from now on total production can only expand slowly—with the labor force and the work week. Moreover, as defense orders increase, the supply of consumer goods will tend to decrease. Therefore, the Administration and Congress can't put off the inflation issue much longer. It will come to a head when the Administration makes tax proposals to Congress. If the taxes aren't stiff enough, direct controls will become inevitable.

Stocks Cancel Early Losses

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 (AP).—The stock market advanced after the national elections this week in one of the steepest rallies of 1950.

When the market closed for the week on Friday the Associated Press average of 60 stocks stood at $83.60 a share. This compared with $82.60 a week ago and the 20-year high of $84.90 touched a few weeks earlier.

Losses in a violent drop on Monday were easily wiped out.

Election results, which showed a striking swing to the right, were not given all the credit for the rally in Wall Street.

The election returns, though, were backed up by signs that Communist China was not intent on setting off World War III and another flood of excellent corporate news.

A notable angle to the Wednesday-Thursday-Friday rally was the fact that volume steadily declined. Wall Street was not dying on the vine for lack of business but, judged by recent standards, trading was routine at best.

Usually a rise of real size generates wider and wider interest. Despite a revival of bullish tendencies in the market, in other words, there was a little, if any, increase in public participation.

There was good solid demand for stocks—buying from investment trusts, for instance—but so-called professional traders played more than a minor role in the recovery.

The market started the week with an ominous news background. General MacArthur formally charged to the United Nations that Communist Chinese had intervened in the North Korean war. The question was immediately asked: Would the United Nations be fighting Communist China as well as Communist Korea?

Prices in the stock exchange broke sharply while major commodities for future delivery soared—a typical war-fear pattern. Selling hit such a fast pace that the high-speed stock-ticker tape lagged in its usual speedy report of transactions for 40 minutes.

Toward the close of trading a smart rally got under way and losses were reduced, substantially in some cases. The rebound may have been influenced by rumors that Chinese forces were withdrawing in North Korea.

On Friday the rally continued though at an even slower pace.

This is how I looked before my mother found a baby sitter through a Post classified ad says

14-month-old M. J. Collins of Alexandria

needed a baby sitter badly. Of course, I usually get everything I want by crying, but it didn't seem to work this time.

Then my mother thought of placing a want ad in The Washington Post. (It's so easy even I could do it—that is if I could talk.) All she did was call NAtional 4200 and ask for Classified. Miss Day helped her to write the ad, and then placed it for her.

On the very day the ad appeared in The Post my mother got a call from a pleasant, friendly woman who likes children. I have a baby sitter now thanks to The Washington Post.

If you have a job to fill, or need a job, don't waste time crying the way I did. Just take my mother's advice and place a want ad in The Washington Post. All you have to do is call NAtional 4200 and ask for Classified. Why not do it to-day.

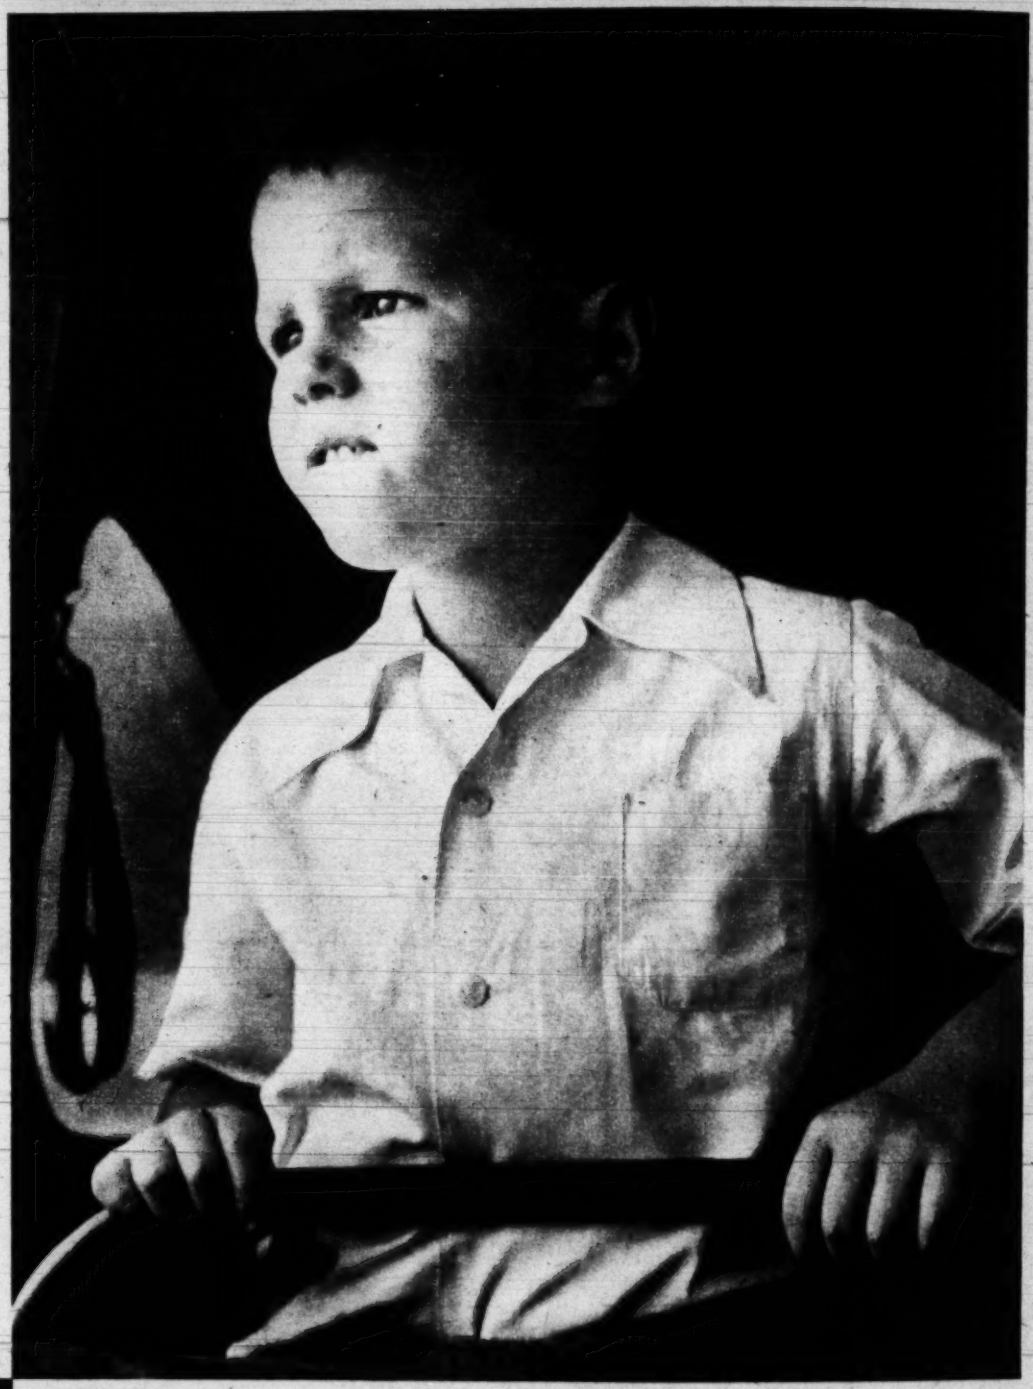
CURIOSITY brought John to watch crop-dusting plane in fields near his home.

His first plane ride

REMEMBER how you felt when you got your first ride on a fire engine? That's how 4-year-old John Keating, of Greenville, Miss., felt when he went up in his first airplane.

It was a crop-dusting plane, used to keep the neighboring cottonfields free from bugs. John had been shyly hanging around for days watching it land and take off.

Finally, pilot George Metcalfe said, "Want a ride, Sonny?" John went to get his mother's permission, brought along his father with a camera. Result: these pictures of boyhood curiosity, wonder, fear, and final triumph.



"Hey, Ma!" Johnny bites his lip to suppress his fear as plane thunders before take-off.

A four-year-old finally got his wish to fly . . .

PILOT Metcalfe invited him to sit at controls, fiddle with the radio. "Howdja like to go up?" asked Metcalfe. "Sure," said John nervously.

EARS began to fill. "Open your mouth," said the pilot.

GAINING nerve, he listened to ground-to-plane directions.

FULL-fledged airman, John looked like this on landing.

HAM RICHARDSON: Had to win a battle off the courts . . .

I Can Do Anything!

They said he'd never play any sport again

You may have heard of Ham Richardson. Although he's only 17, he's one of the finest tennis prospects in the land. He holds two national titles and last summer was named to America's Davis Cup Squad–the highest honor in U.S. tennis.

The remarkable thing about Richardson, however, is not that he's a tennis star. It's that he can play tennis at all. For Ham is a diabetic.

Let's take a backward look at him.

Ham is a student at a Baton Rouge, La., high school and the son of a Baton Rouge chemist. He began to play tennis at six and entered his first tournament at 12. He finished second.

Two years later Ham and another kid won the national boys' doubles championship and in 1948 he won the boys' singles title. Then something happened.

He Lost a Set to Diabetes

One day, after a tournament at Vanderbilt University, Ham fell ill. He was tired and nervous. His thirst was unquenchable and his hunger ravenous. Yet within a week his weight had dropped alarmingly.

Ham was rushed to a hospital where tests disclosed that he had diabetes. It was a death blow to his tennis career.

Or was it?

Ham was given insulin injections and placed on a diet from which sweets were eliminated. He's still on the diet and he still takes the injections but as a tennis player, he's getting better all the time. Last year he beat Ted Schroeder, former national champion.

This week the American Diabetes Association is citing Ham as the diabetic who has done most to surmount the disease in a year. Like hundreds of others similarly affected, he has shown the world that he can do anything!

Excited youngsters help bus, carrying ECA information team, climb hill to Agnone.

Here Comes Uncle Sam's Bus!

It tells the true story of American aid to Italy's people

ROME.

THE BUS COUGHED and the driver shifted into low gear. Slowly, with balky engine, it chugged up the hill into the Italian town of Agnone. A laughing crowd of youngsters (above) did their best to help the bus uphill.

"Cinema!" The shout went up. "Ecco il cinema Americano!" ("Movies! Here come the American movies!")

The curly-haired Italian driver smiled and kept his foot on the gas. "It's the same way all the time, Signor, this Marshall Plan movie, she is very popular. Even the communists, they applaud us!"

The bus—with its projector, public address system and collection of displays—had come to Agnone to tell the townsfolk about the Marshall Plan.

The visit was part of a hard-hitting, mobile publicity campaign Uncle Sam has been pursuing for more than a year to get the facts about ECA help down to the level where it counts the most—to the Italian man in the street.

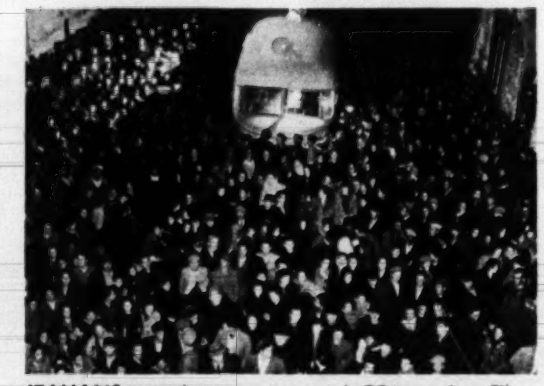
By late last summer, the U.S. ECA mission to Italy had 12 such buses rolling up and down the peninsula. They had traveled 90,000 miles, attracted more than 4.5 million interested spectators. Another 12 buses have just been added.

At Nightfall: a Crowd

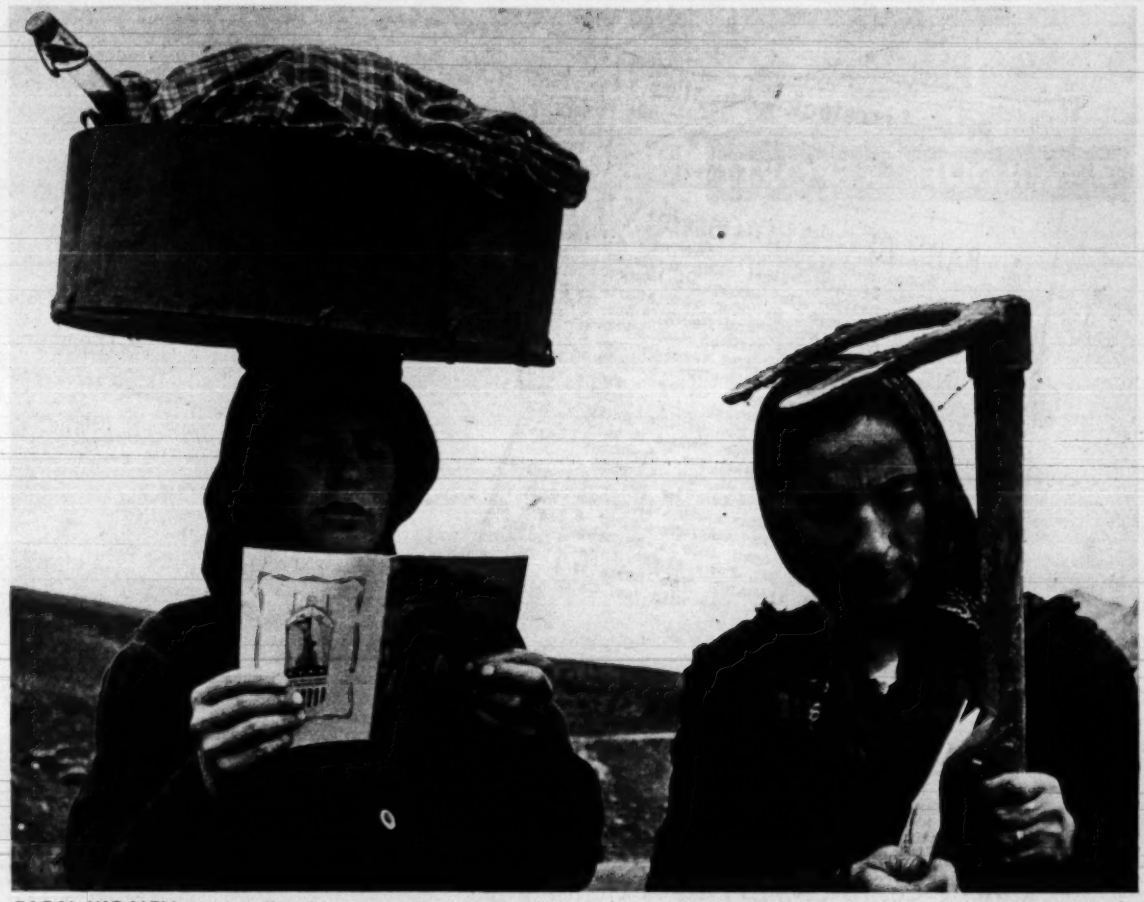
Back in Agnone, the driver parked his bus in the town square. Then, the three-man crew (all Italians) set up their displays. The screen was put up at once, so the townspeople would be sure to know about the movie. Music and announcements poured from the loudspeakers. By nightfall the square was jammed. Everyone who could turned out.

For the most part, the films carried on the buses are 12-minute documentaries made in Italy. Titles include "Town Without Water," the story of how running water came to an Italian town through an ECA-financed aqueduct, and "Rails," the story of the rehabilitation of Italian railways. All of the films dramatize U.S. contribution to Italian recovery. And there's always a Hollywood cartoon!

ECA BUS: a familiar sight in Italy. Their exhibits and movies have even prompted communists to applaud.



ITALIANS crowd square to watch ECA movies. Films are documentaries, emphasize U. S. friendship, aid.



FARM WOMEN read Italian-language pamphlets distributed by ECA information team. Purpose of program is to combat communist propaganda, let Italians know U. S. has contributed one billion dollars in ECA help.

When Sid Ross, daring wild animal editor ("Can a Chimp Play Roulette?" PARADE, July 2), read this ad in a New York newspaper, his editors just couldn't hold him back. He investigated—and here's his report!

HAVE YOU EVER spent an afternoon chatting with a parlor leopard? Well, I have and—what's more—I came back all in one piece. Got a mild case of the shakes, that's all.

Incidentally, the "parlor leopard" (a South American ocelot spotted like a leopard) is for sale. If you're interested, the price is $1,000.

My afternoon with him began when I read an ad (see above) in a New York paper. Although I have no more use for a pet ocelot than I have for a left-handed mustache cup, I phoned "Charley" anyway.

"My doctor advised me to buy an ocelot," I said, untruthfully.

"Come on up!" boomed Charley. (He turned out to be Charles Schutte, a broker and former football player.)

When Schutte opened the door to his Manhattan apartment I turned green. For there was the ocelot sitting in Schutte's arms and growling at me.

"Come on in!" shouted Schutte. "Ozzie won't hurt you, will you Oz?" Ozzie growled.

Together they led me into the library where Schutte explained about Ozzie. He's full grown, weighs 28 pounds, is yellow with brown spots and stands about as high as a bob cat. Schutte bought him in Colombia.

"Ozzie," he said, "is a perfect parlor pet. He loves apartment life, is com-offered him an old, dried-up chicken leg — his favorite household plaything.

WE GOT along fine but, just to play safe, I kept my gloves on.

OZZIE had a nice smile, yet somehow I didn't like it much.

AT LUNCHTIME I petted him. Ozzie eats hamburgers and milk.

LATER he played with toy mouse in bathtub just like a kitten.

Ozzie Has a Sense of Humor

THESE REMARKS were interrupted when Ozzie climbed out of Schutte's arms and up on my head.

"Ha, ha," said Schutte. "Come down here Ozzie. Where are your manners?"

("Always the life of the party," the ad said.)

"Ha, ha," I replied, not wanting Ozzie to think I bore him any ill-will.

Ozzie climbed down slowly, putting two feet in my eye. Then he swiped me on the leg with a strong, affectionate forepaw. Didn't break any bones, however.

Schutte trains wild animals to be pets–just for fun. He started training Ozzie when Ozzie was eight weeks old and now Ozzie can juggle a rubber ball and take a bath all by himself. He likes to dive to the bottom of the bathtub for golf balls. ("Continuously doing amazing tricks!")

I shook hands with Ozzie when I left and he smiled at me as I went out. Offhand, I'd say that to anyone pining away for an apartment-house ocelot, Ozzie–at $1,000–is a bargain. ("Never a dull moment," the ad said.)

HOW TO BUY A TOOTHBRUSH

Most dental authorities agree that the right brush, properly used, is far more important than your dentifrice. Use these recommendations as a check list:

SIZE OF HEAD — The brushing surface should be approximately equal to the width of three adjacent teeth . . . 1 to 1¼ inches in grown-ups . . . ¾ to 1 inch long in children. A longer head may miss crevices. A shorter head makes brushing tedious.

TRIM OF BRISTLES—For maximum contact the trim should be straight. Obviously a curve that fits one side of the teeth cannot fit the other. Even tufts help you to exert even pressure on teeth and gums . . . more efficient in reaching crevices from both sides of the teeth.

TYPE OF BRISTLES — The synthetic bristles in most brushes outlast natural bristles. For example, Squibb natural bristles, although treated for up to 6 times longer life, cannot outlive the Synton bristles in Squibb brushes. Some dentists prefer natural bristles. Ask yours.

NUMBER OF ROWS—The most popular brushes are made with 3 rows of bristles. Some dentists now prefer 2 rows. Most brands are made both ways. If you switch from 3 to 2, ask your dentist how to use the narrow head for best results.

BRAND—There are many excellent brushes. The Squibb Angle Brush, for one, meets all these requirements. It alone combines these features:

A narrow shank to permit proper alignment on the gum line on inside surfaces.

The "Squibb Angle," like the bend in a dentist's mirror, to help you reach hard-to-get-at places.

The Squibb Angle Toothbrush meets every specification set forth in the Journal of the American Dental Association, Volume 33, No. 5, Page 292.

Science finds how to stop your house-dust sneezing!

BY LAWRENCE GALTON

FOR THE five to fifteen million Americans who are allergic to "house dust," there is today a new and simple kind of protection. A compound that's readily and safely sprinkled or soaked into rugs, bedding and other fabrics, traps the "dust" where it originates and provides real relief.

It has ended asthmatic attacks in a young boy who previously suffered them every winter. A middle-aged woman no longer has recurrent bouts of sinusitis and asthma, a little girl is free of her eczema, and others with a wide variety of complaints have been helped.

- "House dust" now is recognized as a separate substance formed within draperies, carpets, furniture and other household items as fabrics deteriorate.
- "Dust" is quite a villain. It not only helps cause respiratory allergies and many eczema cases, but can also produce headaches, canker sores, abnormal fatigue, intestinal upsets and other symptoms! It's a special threat in winter, when more time is spent indoors, air circulates less freely, and "dust" concentrates in your home more readily.
- To date, there have been quite a few attempts to rob house-dust of its power to make trouble. One approach to the problem has been by inoculation. Sufferers get injections of the "dust"—just as pollen shots are given for hay fever—in an effort to build up the body's resistance. The trouble is: injections are often only partly successful.

Special allergen-proof beddings have been devised (allergens are substances that cause allergies). But such "dust"-producers as carpets, draperies and upholstered furniture continue to cause trouble. Many victims have had to strip at least their bedrooms of these items.

Three years ago, an air sanitation firm tackled the problem in a new way—trying to find some material that could knock out "dust" at its source. The result: a white chemical which, mixed with water, formed a milky liquid.

The Doctor Cures Himself

Dr. Arthur F. Coca, a distinguished immunologist and allergy researcher, who had provided the basic information on "house dust" characteristics for the project, was the first to try the new development. He himself suffered from "dust" allergy despite every precaution, but soon after applying the new chemical in his home, Dr. Coca was rid of chest oppression,

To shut off allergic irritations before they get started, watery eyes and diarrhea.

New anti-dust agent makes shaggy toys safe for sensitive children.

After a number of his patients got equally dramatic results, Coca, two years ago, published a preliminary report in the medical journal, Annals of Allergy, describing the new method as "efficient . . . harmless, and easily applied."

Soon, other doctors were trying it–and with gratifying results. "It has controlled respiratory allergies in which usual methods have not succeeded," declared Dr. Fred W Wittich, chairman of the executive committee of the International Association of Allergists.

Officially, "A Useful Adjunct"

Recently, the Committee on Therapy of the American Academy of Allergy – a cautious, conservative group not given to wild enthusiasms–called the new method "a useful adjunct."

The preparation – known as "Dust-Seal" and produced by L. S. Green Associates, 160 West 59th St., New York City–is sponged by the housewife into bulk items such as carpets, upholstered furniture, mattresses, and applied to blankets, bedding, soft toys and other items by immersion. Professional fabric shampooers have added the treatment to their operations.

Thorough investigation shows that the compound does not harm fabrics made with water-fast colors, changing neither appearance, feel nor odor. A pound ($4.25) treats an average room. One treatment lasts a year, and retreatment requires only six ounces.

A particularly helpful feature is this: woolly toys can be treated so allergic youngsters can keep playthings which otherwise would cause trouble. Some work – still highly experimental–is also being done in wetting down the fur of animals so that allergic children and adults may keep pets.

First, See Your Doctor

Dust-Seal, however, is no cure-all. There are many causes of allergy and many people are allergic to multiple factors. But if you or other members of your family suffer from asthma, eczema, headaches, sinusitis, intestinal disorders or any of many symptoms which allergy can produce, see your doctor and let him determine whether allergy is the basic cause and, if it is, what the allergy-producing factor or factors may be.

If "house dust" is involved, it can now be conveniently trapped at its very source.

rted, you can trap house dust right at the source . . .

All Measurements Level

2 cups mashed potatoes*	1 tbsp. grated onion
1 tbsp. butter	½ cup fine bread crumbs
½ tsp. salt	1 egg + 2 tbsps. water
⅛ tsp. pepper	4 veal chops
1 egg yolk	Crisco for frying

Mix cooled potatoes with 1 egg yolk and grated onion. Shape into rolls about 2½" long and thick as a finger. Coat with flour, then roll in diluted egg and then in fine bread crumbs. Melt 4 to 5 tablespoons of Crisco in a heavy 8" or 9" frying pan. Slowly fry potato logs turning to brown all over. Serve piping hot with pan-fried veal chops: quickly brown veal chops in a little hot Crisco. Cover and cook until tender.

Now...false teeth wearers eat corn, steak, apples!

Solve your loose-plate problem with a dentist's discovery that holds dentures tighter

AT LAST . . . you can keep dentures in place, really tight—with the application of a new dental adhesive formulated expressly to keep dental plates in tighter, longer.

This new adhesive—developed by a dentist—is letting thousands of false teeth wearers eat apples, steak, corn on the cob—foods they had to "pass up" before because of their loose and slipping plates.

The secret is simple. This new adhesive contains an ingredient that literally impedes the penetration of moisture—exerts maximum resistance to the fluids (saliva, coffee, other liquids) that weaken and "break down" the action of adhesives and cause dentures to work loose.

This new adhesive, Staze, is a homogeneous gel of a viscous, binding gum. It has a binding, "clinching" action. That's why it "takes hold" almost instantly.

Easy, pleasant to use. Get a tube of Staze at any drugstore.

Bing Crosby: Tycoon!

No. 1 U.S. crooner is becoming a big businessman . .

By Ed Schoenfeld

CAN YOU PICTURE Bing Crosby NOT singing? Bing can.

That's why he's starring today in a new role—as a BIG businessman.

Crosby, in case you didn't know, is fast becoming a tycoon in foods, drugs, clothes and household gadgets. He has dozens of items on the market. And business is very good.

You may have used some of his wares. These are only a few

- A new toy that looks like a lollipop. A flick of the stick shoots out a long curl of paper (PARADE, July 9, 1950).
- A "booster" for an electric razor.
- A breath sweetener.
- Sport shirts (very loud).
- Canned FRESH milk and cream.
- Nylon hosiery.
- A ball-point pen.
- A hydrosulphosol solution for burns.

When he isn't singing, Bing helps develop and market his "products" through Crosby Enterprises and the Crosby Research Foundation. Both are run by Bing's two smart older brothers, Larry and Everett. (Larry heads the Foundation and Everett the Enterprises.) The three Crosbys have their own office building in Hollywood.

He Began with War Devices

Crosby actually started out on his business career shortly before World War II. At that time, a group of Southern California scientists, needing financing, asked him if he would back a foundation to promote valuable inventions. Bing said yes.

And that's how he first became involved in making incendiary bombs, vitamin B complex, submarine detectors and automatic aiming devices for anti-aircraft guns.

After the war, the foundation—which, according to Larry, didn't make a cent in four years—turned to gadgets.

All sorts of items are sent to Crosby—in fact, he has received close to two million in nine years! It costs the foundation $1,500 a month just to send some of them back to the inventors. But 20 or 30 items are going big.

A chemist brought the foundation an oil. Its vapor, drawn into the lungs, was supposed to neutralize mouth odor. The oil was tasteless and colorless. Bing added a scent, called it "Breatholator" and put it up in a neat package. One million were sold the first year, and it has sold millions since.

Bing proudly wears his Pirate cap.

Rocking Horse Became Rocking Bed

A fellow came to the foundation one day trying to promote a rocking horse for kids. The basic principle of the toy was adapted to a hospital rocking bed. Experiments showed that the action of the bed might improve some patients' circulation and body functions.

As a result, one of the foundation's big projects today is a rocking bed for polio victims. Larry thinks it may some day eliminate use of the iron lung.

Another Crosby item: ever hear of milk or cream keeping fresh without refrigeration? Crosby does it with cans. Bacteria are removed before the cans are sealed.

Businessman Bing hasn't forgotten the ladies. He markets a nylon hose with special features.

Still another Crosby gadget is an electric current inverter that gives extra zip to an electric razor. Some 15,000 were sold in a few months.

Crosby actually manufactures only a few items. He finds it easier to place them with manufacturers, then sit back and collect some of the profits.

Bing has lots of other activities and many of them are handled by his brother Everett, through Crosby Enterprises.

That organization handles TV films, sport shirts and recording instruments. It also is involved in a frozen orange juice company, a vast ranch with 3,500 head of cattle near Elko, Nevada, and the Pittsburgh Pirates baseball team (of which Crosby owns a share). Then, of course, there is Bing's recording and radio work.

Bing himself inspects all marketable items before they go into production. But unlike many people with gobs of money, he hasn't become a "soft touch." He's in business, and he's out to make a profit.

He has an office in the Crosby Building, but does most of his work at his home or at his Nevada ranch.

Better Mousetrap Didn't Sell

He has even built a better mousetrap, but the world hasn't battered down his door. Seems this mousetrap is a little longer than the old 10-cent type. It is made of aluminum, works automatically and can't snap down on your finger. But it retails for 29 cents, and so far has been a flop.

"Nice break for the mice," says Bing.

BING'S big-business brothers are Larry (rear) and Everett. They head his business organizations. Here they're looking at photos of Bing in a sport shirt, another Crosby item.

AMERICA'S No. 1 CORN PLASTER

SURROUNDED by lesser stones, Hope Diamond casts baleful blue light. It has been insured for $1,000,000.

Mrs. McLean owned it.

CURSE OF THE 'HOPE'?

By FRANK De BLOIS

NEW YORK.

THE GREAT blue diamond you see on this page (and on PARADE's cover) is the world's most famous precious stone.

They say it's insured for a million dollars and they also say it's "cursed" with a jinx that has brought death or disaster to all who have owned it.

Actually, 90 percent of what you've read about the Hope Diamond is pure legend. Its haunting beauty with its mysterious changes in color is genuine enough, but as a "jinx" it's over-rated.

The Hope's vast lore has sprung from the fact that not all of its history is known. It appeared first in the courts of France in the 17th Century, brought there by couriers from the East.

Marie Antoinette Wore It—And Died

But its "curse" lay dormant for years until it became the property of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, both of whom were later beheaded.

The blue diamond, of course, had absolutely nothing to do with their deaths. They were killed by mobs in the French Revolution. But the legend grew that they had been "cursed by the Blue."

After the Revolution the diamond was stolen by thieves who, in an attempt to disguise it, hacked a 22-carat piece off its small end. It turned up years later in Amsterdam and passed into the hands of a succession of owners most of whom eventually died peacefully in bed, untouched by "the curse."

Were They Cursed By 'The Blue?'

Among these many owners, however, were the following: Lord Francis Hope, a British peer, who gave the diamond its name and whose wife ran off with an American Army officer; Habid Bey, who drowned; Lorens Ladue, who was murdered; Prince Ivan Kanitowski, who was slain by revolutionaries.

Thirty years ago Edward Beale McLean bought the Hope for his wife, the spectacular Washington hostess, Evalyn Walsh McLean. After a full and colorful life, Mrs. McLean died at 60 surrounded by friends who included a bishop, a Senator and an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the U.S. The jinx didn't work on Mrs. McLean.

After her death the diamond was bought by Harry Winston, a New York jeweler who had it insured for $1,000,000.

Winston scoffs at the curse of the Hope. "It's a fabric of coincidence," he says. "Diamonds have brought me nothing but good fortune—and so will the Hope."

Although he owns the Hope, Winston has never been threatened, attacked or robbed. Nevertheless he still follows the advice of his insurance brokers and refuses to let photographers take his picture. "I'm not a bit worried," he says. "It's just that I'm taking no chances!"

WHEN SLEEP WON'T COME AND YOU FEEL GLUM

Use Chewing-Gum Laxative—
REMOVES WASTE...NOT GOOD FOOD

● When you can't sleep—feel just awful because you need a laxative—do as MILLIONS do — chew FEEN-A-MINT.

FEEN-A-MINT is wonderfully different! Doctors say many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon ... right in the stomach. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy ... you feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that weak, tired feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel fine, full of life! 25¢, 50¢, or only 10¢

IN FOR THE KILL! It looks like a draw.

FLYING the airlift to Korea can be a monotonous assignment–when you spend 135 hours a month droning over the Pacific. That's what the 600 men of Navy Air Transport Squadron 8 (VR-8), based in Hawaii, had been doing for weeks when their commanding officer, Capt. Joseph Clinton, decided they needed a party.

What they got was the kind of party most sailors dream of but seldom see. The gobs were the guests, and the officers did the work. They staged a fiesta, complete with bull (two lieutenant commanders) and chorus girls (assorted brass). It was a night full of laughs for VR-8. Next day they were back flying the airlift.

SAILORS and their wives were just guests. They watched the brass do all the work.

Rich with Toasted Coconut

Good old-time holiday pie with a modern "cloud o' pumpkin" touch and crisp toasted Baker's coconut—the pie of pies to make a meal festive. It's easy, too, with Knox Gelatine. Here's your recipe:

1 envelope Knox Unflavored Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1¼ cups mashed cooked pumpkin
¾ cup evaporated milk
½ cup water
2 egg yolks, slightly beaten
¾ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
½ teaspoon salt ¼ teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cinnamon 2 egg whites
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 cup Baker's Shredded Coconut, toasted*
1 baked 9-inch pie shell
½ cup cream, whipped and sweetened

Soften gelatine in ¼ cup cold water. Combine pumpkin, milk, ½ cup water, egg yolks, ½ cup of the sugar, salt and spices in top of double boiler. Cook over boiling water 10 minutes, stirring constantly. Add gelatine and stir until dissolved. Remove from boiling water. Chill until slightly thickened.

Beat egg whites until foamy. Add remaining sugar gradually and continue beating until stiff. Fold stiffly beaten egg whites, vanilla and ¾ cup of the toasted coconut into pumpkin mixture. Turn into cold pie shell. Chill until firm. Before serving, top with whipped cream and remaining toasted coconut.

*To toast coconut, spread thinly in shallow pan. Place in moderate oven (350° F.) and toast about 10 minutes, or until delicately browned. Stir occasionally to toast evenly.

Look: men's

IT USED TO BE that a stiff breeze was the only thing that could whisk a hat from a gentleman's head. But now the ladies have done it! The derby, the fedora, the sailor, the cap and other distinctly masculine hats have become feminized. Mr. John of New York, always a trend-setter, started the fashion. He calls his new hats "Stage Door Johnnies." They're available at leading stores everywhere.

The new and unusual hats

MYSTERY GUNS

Battered guns, human bones, long hidden in sands, baffle investigators

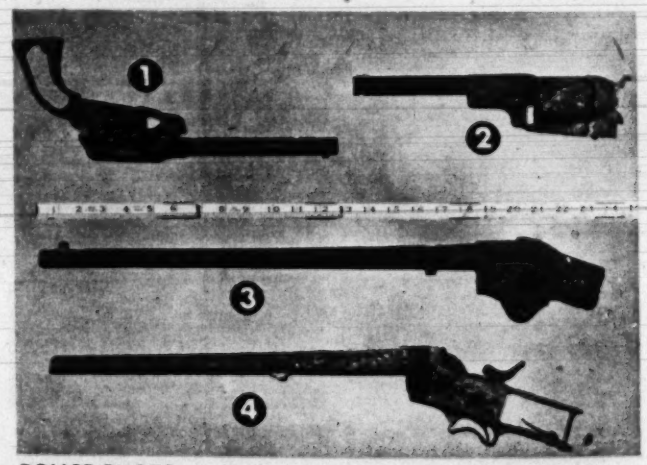
GORDON'S WELLS, Calif.

THE DESERT'S SHIFTING SANDS near here may hold further clues to a wilderness mystery.

Surveyors one day stumbled upon seven skeletons. Beside six of them lay rusted, broken guns.

In the San Diego police crime laboratory, Lieut. Walter Scott examined the guns, reported they averaged around 80 years old, had been bent and broken when swung as clubs against assailants.

But whose guns were they? Did they belong to stage passengers, soldiers, or a wagon train party? Heightening the mystery, the surveyors found a wagon-wheel rim, but no skeletons of horses. What became of the seven dead travelers' horses? Only the desert knows the answers—but winds may some day uncover further evidence. ★★★



POLICE PHOTO shows (1) the same revolver as above; (2) another broken revolver with bent hammer tip; (3) a rifle with broken grip and lever; (4) rifle still cocked, trigger guard bent by blow.
